Nixon Tapes Aren't There

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — The White House told U.S. district Judge John Sirica today there is no tape of a crucial conversation between President Nixon and ousted counsel John Dean on April 15, 1973.

Also missing is a conversation with former U.S. attorney-general John N. Mitchell immediately following the bugging arrests at the Democratic headquarters at the Watergate in June, 1972.

White House Lawyer J. Fred Buzhardt acknowledged that the telephone conversation with Mitchell which took place on the evening of June 20, 1972, "apparently was made from a phone extension" in the White House that was "not hooked into the recording system."

Buzhardt also said a tape of a conversation between Nixon and Dean in the president's office on April 15, 1973, "was not recorded due to a malfunction of the system or a basic inadequancy of the system."

The two tape recordings were among nine subpoenaed by special prosecutor Archibald Cox before he was fired by Nixon Oct. 20.

The following Tuesday, on Oct. 23, Nixon announced he would bow to two federal court orders requiring him to surrender all nine tapes for Sirica's inspection and eventual review by federal grand juries investigating the scandal.

Sirica said he had learned that the two tapes did not exist when he met Buzhardt privately Tuesday to discuss procedures for turning over the material to the court.

Earlier, in Washington, Sen. William Saxbe, the outspoken Republican from Ohio, emerged from an hour-long meeting with President Nixon today and said he was "relatively sure" that he would be nominated as the next U.S. attorney-general.

Saxbe said he would welcome the challenge of pulling the demoralized justice department together again and indicated announcement of his nomination was simply waiting routine checks.

"I'm relatively sure," he said when asked if he would be nominated. "I don't want to be presumptuous and say I've got it in the bag."

Saxbe said he had a candid discussion with Nixon and received assurances that the president's own actions regarding the Watergate affair have been proper.

In addition, Saxbe said he had been assured he would have the independence to do a proper job.

"I'm satisfied any necessary information will be made available from presidential tapes and documents," Saxbe told newsmen in an impromptu news conference on the front drive of the White House.

Saxbe often has backed Nixon on major legislation, but also has been an outspoken critic. Referring to the president's statements on Watergate, he once said: "He (Nixon) is like the man who plays piano in a house of ill repute and says he doesn't know what's going on upstairs."

Meanwhile, assistant Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd said today new disclosures in the ITT case appear to provide grounds for perjury charges involving 1972 Senate testimony.

In related developments, the House judiciary committee appears ready to move quickly on the nomination of Gerald Ford to be vice-president, but politics may bog down action on impeachment of President Nixon.

Oil Policy Thursday

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Energy Minister Donald Macdonald will make a comprehensive statement, regarding future prices of gasoline and oil in eastern and western Canada, in the Commons Thursday.

He indicated that if prices of oil and gasoline in eastern Canada, based on offshore supplies of crude, were considerably higher than prices in western Canada, based on Alberta supplies of crude, it would cause complications.

The statement is also expected to deal with other problems arising out of the soaring cost of oil imported into Canada from Venezuela and the Arab states.

Macdonald criticized Gulf Canada Ltd. for violating the freeze with a one-cent-a-gallon increase Monday for all fuels produced in its Montreal refinery.

Macdonald said the increase constituted a breach of a commitment made by the company when it, along with others, agreed to the proposed freeze.

Gulf raised its price as a result of sharp price increases by oil-producing countries overseas.

The government had specifically requested the company not to raise prices and that it await a government decision he said.

Conservative leader Stanfield asked if there was now a "thaw" in the government's price freeze request to the companies and if the government intends to determine the amount of increase in retail prices that would be justified in the light of the substanial increase in the price of Venezuelan crude imported into Canada.

"My statement on prices will be quite full," Macdonald said.

He refused to predict how high prices would rise in Canada in a month's time as a result of the large increase in Venezuelan oil entering Canada.

"We will have to keep a close watch on the landed cost of oil at Montreal to make a more precise evaluation of the impact on the domestic price in Canada," he explained.

Meanwhile, Trans-Canada Pipelines Ltd., which delivers natural gas to markets east of Alberta, will raise its rates to distributors by as much as

Stork Comes By PWA

Mary Ethel King wasn't on the passenger list when Pacific Western Airlines flight 722 left Port Hardy at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday—but she certainly was when the plane landed 25 minutes later in Vancouver.

And rather than charge Mary for the unscheduled flight, PWA has given her a free pass to fly on the airline until she is 21.

The pass will expire Oct. 30, 1994.

Mary, the daughter of Martha King of Port Hardy, was born while the Boeing 737 was cruising at the 15,000-foot level.

The plane was scheduled to stop at Comox before proceeding to Vancouver, but Flight Captain Frank Lote, 32, of Maple Ridge, flew straight to Vancouver after Mary was born.

There were no major complications, Captain Lote said after the plane landed.

Flight attendants Lani Reynolds, Janet Affelstein and Gail Bjornson assisted Mrs. J. Bianco—a registered nurse accompanying the mother—with the birth.

Mother and child were taken to Vancouver General Hospital by an ambulance. Both are reported doing well today.

U.S. PROTEST TO HANOI

Times News Services

The United States Tuesday formally protested that the Vietnam ceasefire of last January is being blatantly violated by "heavy infiltration" of North Vietnamese into South Vietnam.

U.S. state department spokesman Robert McCloskey said the U.S. had protested to Hanoi violations of the ceasefire agreement. He said the alleged infiltration suggested that North Vietnam is preparing for major military action in the south.

The U.S. protest was underscored today by a similar warning by South Vietnam Premier Nguyen Van Thieu. He also said the Communists are preparing for a new war.

In a nationwide radio and television address to mark National Day Thursday, Thieu said that while he was talking, tens of thousands of troops were moving from North Vietnam into South Vietnam to take part in a new war.

Thieu also called on his people to "become economically independent" in less than two years, throwing off dependence on U.S. aid.

He said this "self-sufficiency" had to be based on agricultural development.

Copter Raid Frees IRA Men

Times News Services

DUBLIN — A helicopter hijacked by a man who identified himself as an American moviemaker whisked Irish Republican Army chief Seamus Twomey and two other top IRA prisoners from Mountjoy Prison today in the most dramatic prison escape in Irish history.

The helicopter swooped to a landing inside the prison walls as the three IRA men exercised and an armed man inside the aircraft held guards at bay while the prisoners climbed aboard, police said.

In less than a minute, it whirled away in a cloud of dust.

"It was just like something out of some bloody film," one police officer said. "Nothing like this has ever happened before."

Security forces immediately launched a nation-wide search, but no trace of the escapees was found.

The Irish cabinet was called into emergency session.

Police said the helicopter was chartered at Dublin airport from Irish Helicopters Ltd.

The company said a man who called himself "Mr. Leonard" and said he was an American moviemaker staying at a Dublin hotel claimed

TAKU TUNES OUT

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Taku, where are you?

The big bull killer whale that was to be the "guinea pig" for the department of fisheries' latest research project has given his trackers the slip.

Taku—named for the windy conditions that prevailed when he was released at Pedder Bay Saturday— is fitted with a telemetric device on his dorsal fin that emits bleeps that can be tracked on radio.

The trouble is the bleeps are blocked out should he get behind an island or rock formation.

Dr. Michael Biggs of the department's biological station at Nanaimo was aboard the research boat Santa Rita when Taku took off on his fling of freedom.

He reports the whale led them a merry chase until they ran out of bleeps.

"After leaving Pedder Bay," he said, "He headed for Discovery Island where he met about 10 whales scattered around an area of about a mile."

Biggs said Taku carried on up Haro Strait, sticking around long enough to socialize with about "30 or 40" more of his species in centre channel.

From there Taku made his way over to San Juan Island, further north toward Sidney and finally set a course for some of the smaller American islands.

Behind one of these, Saturday night, he made his getaway.

"We spent all night trying to find him," Biggs said, "But he probably took a long dive —as whales often do — and disappeared out of our range."

Monday and Tuesday, Biggs became airborne in an effort to track Taku.

"He's out trying to find where his own pod has gone," Biggs said, "and that could cover a wide area from the west coast of the island, Johnstone Strait to the Gulf Islands."

In addition to his bleeper, Taku can also be recognized by the two notches cut in his dorsal fin for the purpose of easy identification.

Biggs and his co-workers hope that anyone spotting Taku in his travels will notify the nearest fisheries' office of the truant's whereabouts.

Barrett Slams 'Elitist' MDs

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

A stinging attack on the "elitism" of B.C.'s medical profession was launched by Premier Barrett Tuesday night as the legislature gave approval in principle to the Medical Centre of B.C. Act.

The attack came during three hours of lively and at times violent debate on the bill which sets up a crown corporation to co-ordinate and plan medical education and sophisticated care facilities, specifically in Greater Vancouver.

Barrett called the medical profession a "backward closed union shop" that assumes only it knows what is best for the people. (Barrett's attack today was labelled a "cheap shot." See page 57.)

Responding to a speech by Pat McGeer (L—Vancouver-Point Grey), who criticized the "lay" make-up of the corporation's board of directors, the premier said to insist on doctors making up the board would be analagous to having only teachers on school boards.

He blasted the centralization of health services at the University of B.C., calling the mental health centre there "an upper middle-class resort designed to teach medical students about mental health facilities that don't even exist in this province."

"If we allow continuation of that kind of elitist planning we would be failures as legislators," Barrett said.

As part of the movement away from the profession's "closed shop," the premier said UBC should be graduating 160 doctors a year instead of 80.

Barrett's outburst came in the wake of a Social Credit motion to have the entire bill hoisted for six months in order to await the Foukes' report on health care in B.C.

(The report of the year-long study is expected to be ready shortly and no matter its contents, it will be made public, according to Health Minister Dennis Cocke. See Page 23.)

The Socreds charged that either Health Minister Dennis Cocke knows the contents of the Foulkes study in which case he should release it to the house, or he doesn't know what that study will recommend, in which case he should wait to hear its results before introducing such major legislation.

Bob McClelland (SC — Langley) moved the bill be lifted and reintroduced in six months, after all members

BIG-CAR TAX EYED AS FUEL SAVER

WASHINGTON (Reuter)—A stiff new car-tax proposal could change the driving habits of many Americans by switching most United States car production to compact autos, which get more miles to the gallon.

A 35-page treasury staff study recommends a high tax on new cars if they get less than 20 miles to a U.S. gallon gasoline. The U.S. gallon is four-fifths the size of the Canadian gallon.

The tax would start in 1975 and rise over a three-year period to give manufacturers time to convert to more economical models.

When fully effective, the tax, which consumers would pay once only when they buy a new vehicle, could range from more than $1,200 for luxury limousines to nothing at all on small cars.

The staff proposal would have to be cleared by the treasury and the White House before being submitted to Congress, where two similar bills have already been introduced.

U.S. Puts Heat on Israel

Times News Services

The United States is pressing Israel to allow countries that do not recognize her to send troops to the UN Emergency Force diplomatic sources said Tuesday.

(Canadian participants on the new UN peace-keeping force will be soldiers-of-all-trades. See Page 10.)

The pressure is part of a U.S. campaign to persuade Israel to make concession on bigger issues, such as a return to the Oct. 22 ceasefire positions, which would compel Israel to give up a large part of her gains on the west bank of the Suez.

Pressure over UNEF is also vital because secretary general Kurt Waldheim is still having trouble finding 7,000 men for UNEF who are acceptable to all members of the Security Council and all parties to the conflict.

President Anwar Sadat of Egypt today, meanwhile disputed Israel's claim that it has the Egyptian 3rd Army trapped in the southern Sinai desert.

Sadat said the 3rd Army has the Israelis trapped on the southwest bank of the Suez canal.

He also told a news conference in Cairo that Israel must pull back the troops on the west side of the canal to the lines they held at the time of the first ceasefire on Oct. 22 before he will exchange any prisoners of war.

Israel had reported Tuesday that an exchange of wounded PoWs was imminent.

Sadat said his officers were pressing him to let them wipe out the Israeli forces on the west bank of the canal but he was holding back to give President Nixon time to pre-

Cabs Won't Roll When Anne Weds

LONDON (UPI) — Taxi drivers in London say they will stage a one-day strike on the day of Princess Anne's wedding to protest low wages and draw attention to their demands.

"I am sure most taxi drivers will support the call," said union official George Abrahams. "People going to the wedding will either have to walk or get a bus."

Princess Anne marries army Capt. Mark Phillips in Westminster Abbey on Nov. 14.

First Sniffer bug ...Now Smudgybug

Smudgybug, little sister to Snifferbug, has joined British Columbia's war against pollution.

The $35,000 smoking machine will tour the province giving three-day courses on smoke observation in an effort to train certified smoke-watchers for battle against air pollution.

Smudgybug emits a small, deliberately created smoke plume of a known fixed density so that observers can then be trained to measure the smoke depth with scientific accuracy.

The training course is offered by the provincial water resources department and is open at first only to department personnel and selected representatives from municipalities and industries. Later it will be open to the public at a charge of $3.

The Smudgybug joins Snifferbug, a mobile air monitoring laboratory which has been touring the province measuring pollution for several months.

Now That's a Hairy Tonic!

VANCOUVER (CP) — The deputy manager of British Columbia's Liquor Control Board told Tuesday how the board once analyzed a weird patent medicine called "tincture of tiger bone" — and discovered the concoction was potent enough to bowl over a moose.

In an address to the B.C. Hotels' Association, Victoria Woodland of Victoria said the board had to suppress the sale of the concoction which was supposed to have medicinal properties.

"When we got it back from the analyst it turned out to be about 80 over-proof — you couldn't light a match in a room where you had the bottle top off.

"We figured that one spoonful would be equal to about four ounces of our liquor. You'd certainly feel good after taking a dose."

Dealing with exotic medicines proposed for sale in B.C. is all part of a day's work for the board's staff, said Woodland.

MP's WAILING WALL

OTTAWA (CP) — If Terry O'Connor had stayed away from his Commons office a day longer, he might not have been able to find it again.

When the Conservative MP for Halton arrived Tuesday, after being away for the weekend, he found workmen bricking up one of his two entrances.

None of the workmen knew why.

O'Connor asked Speaker Lucien Lamoureux in the Commons to order the construction stopped.

He said that when he was elected last October, he thought he had a job until a subsequent election, his resignation or his death.

Lamoureux granted O'Connor's request.

Housing Costs 'Up 242%'

Immediate action to ease B.C.'s housing crisis was demanded Tuesday in a brief to the provincial government submitted by the United Community Services Organization of Vancouver.

The group says monthly housing costs have skyrocketed 242 per cent in the last 10 years, while average disposable income has increased only 85 per cent in the same period.

The cost of land, they say, has gone up 525 per cent in 10 years, from $4,000 in 1963 to $25,000 in 1973 for a typical lot in Burnaby.

In the brief submitted to Lorne Nicolson, the cabinet minister who will soon be in charge of the government's new housing department, the group lists seven steps to be taken by the province:

—Adjust per capita grants to municipalities based on the number of families moving in and the assessment base of the community in order to encourage municipalities to increase their housing in the face of increased service costs;

—Set a 60-day limit for approvals of subdivisions to end the lengthy and expensive delays experienced now;

—In one month compile an inventory of all publicly owned land and in 90 days an inventory of all privately owned parcels over one acre;

—Pinpoint urban growth areas and "make visible the government's determination to stem present spiralling costs" by helping development;

—Raise taxes to 100 per cent on "vacant serviced land in urban areas, to stimulate the process of in-filling";

—Ensure sufficient staffing in the provincial housing field;

—Purchase or lease units in moderate cost developments for persons whose incomes require a housing subsidy.

Representatives of the group said they were well-received by Nicolson, but he gave them no promise of immediate action.

have had an opportunity to seek the extensive report.

The motion was defeated in a 37-to-1 vote with the lone Conservative in the house, Oak Bay MLA Scott Wallace, voting with the government against the Socreds and Liberals.

Wallace also used the opportunity to conduct a strong attack — this time on the former Socred administration's health policies.

He called former premier W. A. C. Bennett's actions in not allowing an increase in the number of medical school graduates "one of the coldest, most callous, inhman decisions that man ever made."

In comparison to the Socred record, Wallace said, the legislation represents "great progress" and a "humane attitude which never existed in the previous administration."

He said action in the health field is desperately needed and he didn't wish to wait for the Foulkes' report because he doesn't think Foulkes "knows what he's talking about."

Wallace said he is not familiar with the situation Vancouver but in Victoria there is an overwhelming need for action.

"The planning and delay and straight indifference on the part of people in this city is nothing short of a disgrace," he said.

"It's easier to get blood out of stone" than to get action on medical services in Victoria, he said.

In criticizing the bill, McClelland said it will create a "colossal bureaucracy" to centralize all the province's medical services.

He said it was a move to do away with local hospital boards.

In defending the legislation, Cocke said the medical centre created by the bill will consolidate the activities of Vancouver General Hosptal, Children's Hospital, G. F. Strong Rehabilitation Centre, UBC Health Sciences Centre and the B.C. Cancer Institute.

He said in planning the legislation the Greater Vancouver Regional District, representatives of UBC and the B.C. Medical Association all endorsed the government plan.

The final vote on second reading approval in principle tallied 36-14 with the Conservative party again supporting the government in passing second reading.

The vote was taken amid the continuing opposition shouts: "Where is the Foulkes' report?".

Cash Called Handicapped Key

Economic equality dominates the "dreams" of the physically handicapped, speakers at the opening of a department of human resources conference at Queen Victoria Inn said today.

"Why can't they put the handicapped on the same economic basis as other people?" asked James Olldyn of the International Society of the Handicapped.

He is one of some 50 delegates attending the conference called by Human Resources Minister Norman Levi to determine the needs of the physically handicapped in B.C.

Olldyn's question was repeated by others taking part in an opening workshop at which participants were asked by conference chairman Ms. Merle Smith to talk about the dreams of the handicapped.

George Simmonds of the B.C. Puffers, an organization of persons suffering respiratory diseases, said his dream and that of many others is "to live as we would if we had not been disabled."

Mrs. Judy Nyquist of Victoria's Arbutus Workshop objected to the ceiling of independent earnings of handicapped pensioners and said the $18 a month "comfort allowance" of hospitalized disabled persons is not enough.

Other speakers called for subsidized housing and transportation, government support for group homes and higher pensions.

Only Ms. Audrey Hill of Cheshire Homes in Vancouver spoke out against economic considerations in the dreams of the handicapped.

"There must be enrichment. I do not mean a place to earn a living. I do not mean basket weaving. I mean something that enriches lives. I mean enrichment for enrichment's sake.

She said, "It is time for society — the handicapped and the able-bodied too — to stop thinking of people's worth in terms of what they can do in the market place."

She said, on a visit to Pearson Hospital where she saw polio victims in iron lungs staring "at those blank white ceilings," she thought "if there are any people in the world who should be looking at the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, it is these people."

Ms. Hill called for the creation of a civil rights movement for the handicapped to "give the government full awareness of the handicapped."

Opening the conference Levi said he would like to see "a small advisory group of people" formed to counsel the government on the needs of the handicapped.

Premier Dave Barrett will address the conference tonight.

Conserve Electricity, Hartley Tells Group

Public Works Minister Bill Hartley today urged architects and engineers of B.C. to set an example in the conservation of electrical energy.

He stressed the need for awareness of the encroaching energy crisis situation in a speech to a day-long lighting seminar sponsored by the Vancouver Island chapter of the Illuminating Engineering Society.

"There's a possibility Americans are more aware of the conservation need, because they're facing a more serious crisis now," he said.

"But that's not to say the same situation won't face us in the future."

Engineers and architects should plan for necessity, he said, requesting conference delegates to show a concern for production of high quality lighting, rather than a high quantity.

Speakers at the conference, which drew about 100 delegates from B.C. centres, emphasized the urgency of designing efficient techniques in the field of electricity.

"We must concentrate on effective lighting," said D. S. Gordon, a lighting supervisor of B.C. Hydro in Vancouver.

He said the seeing requirements of society will increase and "eyes will be asked to take on more difficult tasks for a longer period of time.

"There will be an expected increase in the amount of lighting required.'

A concentration of better use of electricity would remove the wasteful use of lighting, caused among other things by poor maintenance of systems already in operation in office centres.

"It's time that market activity was revised to stop electrical waste," said Gordon. "We have the tools at our disposal for efficiency."

Designers, for example, could conserve energy by careful use of higher density light in certain work areas and by careful use of rich colors.

"The basic objective of selling is the root cause of electrical waste,," he added. "Sales promotion (using electricity) has become so attractive, salesmen are reluctant to switch it off."

An addresss by Cash Crouch, director of research of the Federation if IES, outlined researcch at the Ohio State University, which proves the need for higher light intensity for the lederly.

He said research indicates a sharp decrease in visual perception of people between 40 and 50 years. They need increased illumination.

Light systems are designed, he said, for those between 20 and 30 years, "those who are at the peak of visual ability."

Aging people need "more light on their task."

Crouch stressed the importance of graduated light with more intense illumination at work force points, and said when research has been completed necessary changes in lighting patterns for centres, such as senior citizens homes, should be considered.

10.7 per cent, effective Thursday.

The increase was approved by the National Energy Board Tuesday to offset rising prices that Trans-Canada says it will have to pay for gas from western suppliers between now and November, 1974.

The boost will add 5.2 cents to the roughly 50 cents a thousand cubic feet that distributors now pay in all areas east of North Bay, Ont.

"Somewhat lesser increases" will apply in marketing zones west of North Bay, the board said.

It was not clear what impact the decision will have on domestic and industrial natural gas users.

Trans-Canada applied for the increases because it expects to pay an additional $47.9 million for gas during the next year.

In Washington, it was reported that the White House will ask Congress this week for emergency powers to curb the use of heating oil and electricity by limiting the working hours for office buildings, stores, theatres, restaurants and shopping centres.

The legislation is also understood to include a call for perfanent daylight saving time as a way of saving electricity this winter and a nationwide highway speed limit of 50 miles an hour to conserve gasolene next spring.

"We are attempting to project ahead the shortages we anticipate as well as the shortages we have," one administration adviser said Tuesday.

"The gasoline shortage is one we're projecting for next year, not one we already have."

he needed the helicopter to take aerial shots about 30 miles north of Dublin.

When the pilot landed at the film location, armed men surrounded the aircraft and forced him to fly to the prison.

Police said the pilot dropped off the escapees near Dublin and that they were believed to have completed their escape by car to a pre-arranged hideout.

They identified the trio as Twomey, former chief of staff of the militant provisional IRA who was sentenced to three years imprisonment earlier this month, Kevin Mallon and J. B. O'Hagan.

All three served on the ruling vouncil of the provisionals with policy-making powers over operations in Northern Ireland.

Meanwhile, the Ulster Defence Association said today thousands of its men would seal off the border between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic at midnight.

A spokesman for the paramilitary Protestant group said UDA patrols would enforce "a complete closure of the border" turning back all vehicles trying to enter Northern Ireland.

"We are determined the border shall be shut," the spokesman said.

"It will be manned 24 hours a day by patrols of thousands of UDA men."

The UDA said the opeation would continue until police and army troops close the border.

vail on the Israelis to withdraw.

He indicated Nixon and State Secretary Henry Kissinger, in their talks this week with his acting foreign minister, Ismail Fahmy, agreed that the Israelis should withdraw.

"Despite all the help the United States has given Israel," Sadat said, "I must say that up to this moment it has taken a constructive stand for peace."

Fahmy was to be followed in Washington by Israeli Premier Golda Meir, who left Tel Aviv today for the United States.

The White House said he will meet Nixon Thursday, and Washington sources said Kissinger plans to pursue his quest for peace in the Middle East with a visit to Cairo and other capitals in the area next week.

Defence Minister Moshe Dayan told the Israeli parliament that Egypt has provided a list of 82 PoWs, 45 of them injured, and promised a list of all its PoWs within three days.

He said there will be an immediate exchange of wounded prisoners, and Israel will take the first step by freeing 75 wounded Egyptians.

"We asked them for a full prisoner exchange but we have no promise on this," Dayan said. "but once the wounded are back and once the visits of the International Red Cross are taking place and the lists have been exchanged, I believe the full exchange would follow."

Another issue began taking on added importance today — an Arab blockade of the Red Sea to cut off Israel's imports of oil and other supplies from Africa and the Far East.

One of the major causes of the 1967 Arab-Israeli war was the Egyptian blockade of the port of Eilat.

Diplomatic and defence sources in Britain speculated that the new blockade may have been one of the reasons for dispatch of U.S. 6th fleet ships to the Indian Ocean.

French President Georges Pompidou said today attemps by the United States and the Soviet Union to settle world crises such as the Middle East conflict are dangerous and Europe must be allowed to play a role.

He called on France's European partners to agree promptly to regular summit meetings — the first to be held before the year's end — to gain a hearing in world affairs.

Three Get Cultural Grants

Grants totalling $93,500 have been awarded three Victoria cultural groups from the B.C. Cultural Fund.

The grants are among 15 totalling $676,682 announced Tuesday by Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall as part of the continuing government assistance to cultural organizations throughout B.C.

Bastion Theatre Society will receive $38,500, Victoria Symphony Society $35,000, and the Victoria Art Gallery $20,000.

In other parts of the Island, Shawnigan Lake Summer School will receive $50,000 and Courtenay Youth Music Camp will share a $45,000 grant with the Vancouver Youth Orchestra and Vancouver Junior Symphony.

Little Orange Lobby Pays

Little orange bookmarks are proving to be one of the most ingenious lobbying tools in British Columbia.

Fifty-thousand of them are being circulated by book sellers in an effort to have B.C. doff the dubious honor of being the only place in Canada where there's a sales tax on books.

The bookmarks are being signed by concerned "bookworms" and sent to Premier Dave Barrett.

Designed by Bill Duthie of Vancouver, the bookmarks claim that the magazine Playboy is tax free while Plato—because it is a book—is not.

They go on to state:—"A tax on books is a tax on knowledge. Please remove it."

Jim Munro of Munro's Book Store on Yates says the campaign was planned in September at a meeting of the Canadian Book Sellers' Association in Vancouver.

Munro said book sellers have been "lobbying on and off for years' 'to get the tax removed.

During the years of Social Credit government we couldn't get in to see Mr. Bennett," he said, "We did talk to some of the ministers but I guess they were all afraid to bell the cat."

Munro said the tax was taken off magazines by the Social Credit government "because they didn't want a tax on education."

"The NDP all along have been very much in favor of getting the tax (on books) removed," he said, "We had a very nice letter from Dave Barrett saying it was under study, still it's been under study for a long time now."

Munro said that while most local readers have become resigned to paying a sales tax on books, tourists often complain.

Some of the lobbying bookmarks may well bear the signatures of ministers and their staff before the campaign is over.

"We sell a lot of books to the government," Munro said.

Naturally, the bookmarks will be included in every shipment.

More Bogus Bills

Three more bogus $50 bills have turned up this week in Victoria, bringing to 90 the total number seized by police since July, a spokesman for the Victoria Fraud Squad said today.

The three bills showed up in cash deposits at the Bank of Nova Scotia, 702 Yates, and Toronto Dominion Bank, 1405 Douglas, both on Monday.

"There are indications there are more counterfeit bills here already and are going to be passed in the same way," the spokesman warned.

The bogus bills first showed up here after the July 1 holiday weekend.

"There was a whole raft to start with," the spokesman said. "Then they dropped off very rapidly because after the first impact people were on their toes."

For the past two months counterfeit bills have trickled in at the rate of one or two a week.

CONTRACT VALID

A B.C. Supreme Court ruling in Vancouver Tuesday apparently has removed a possible legal obstacle to construction of the proposed Reid Centre project of Wharf Street.

Mr. Justice F. C. Munroe ruled the city of Victoria had the power to extend certain time limits in land-use contract it entered into with developer J .A. Reid for a two-tower apartment, hotel and commercial project bordering the Inner Harbor.

Purpose of the trial was to examine the legal status of the land-use contract.

Munroe was told Victoria is not opposed to the project but that the proposed development has aroused opposition by a substantial section of Victoria residents. About $200,000 has sbeen spent on the project so far.

In the Municipal Field

The slogan of "votes for people, not land" which governs the NDP administration's latest amendments to the Municipal Act, has more validity in Greater Victoria today than in earlier days when propertyless tenants comprised a very small minority of the population. With a much larger proportion of the people now living in rented accommodation, it is logical to spread the money-voting franchise more widely. The one-man-one-vote philosophy is also in line with the modern trend toward greater equality in government.

The new amendments, however, are not free from the government's apparently inherent tendency to look on business as an evil which must at best be only tolerated. People should have votes, but under municipal laws it is property that pays taxes, and the new amendments will leave large areas of British Columbia's cities — the core areas where industries and business firms provide the bulk of the tax income — silent as to the rates to be paid and the loans for which responsibility must be carried, for only residents will have that right, and few owners live in stores or plants. Non-property owners who over a period of time might take advantage of this fact by overloading the tax base could find substantial changes taking place in their cities and industrial areas, as invested capital sought to adjust to a new situation. It may be that the government has eventual removal of the property tax in mind, and its replacement by income tax as a means of ensuring that voices at the polls are earned by direct financial contribution to the civic coffers.

The Minister, under the new legislation, will have broad powers affecting the amalgamation of municipalities or unorganized areas, the location of voting boundaries, and other matters. This also is part of the observable preference of the NDP cabinet to make governance easier by making it tidier.

Some aspects of the legislation should be widely approved. The move to simplify preparation of the voting lists, for instance, and creation of a single list for provincial and municipal balloting should result in greater efficiency and lower costs. The matter of the 50-per-cent plus one vote for money bylaws and other municipal questions could be more contentious.

Municipal Affairs Minister Lorimer is quoted as being in doubt about money bylaws in any case, feeling that the elected councils should make such decisions. That is fair in theory, but Victorians will remember occasions when large loan bylaws were defeated and sent back to the council to be pared of unwanted items and unwanted expense. Elected representatives aren't always unassailably right — even provincial ones.

We Could Not Afford the Loss

Highways Minister Lea's decision to let public reaction be the deciding factor in judging the proposal to widen the Island Highway where it passes through the Goldstream canyon area should quickly settle the matter. It is unthinkable that the public reaction could be anything but negative, if the so-called "improvement" of the roadway means widening it at the expense of the stream and its beautiful banks.

The Goldstream parklands and the attractive stream have achieved a high place in local public regard. Attempts to deprive the river of adequate water for the spawning salmon from time to time have aroused a popular outcry that was successful in averting catastrophe. When a public appeal asked people to conserve water so that more would be available from the low reservoir to augment the stream flow, there was a notable response as thousands of Greater Victoria residents cut down on their domestic use.

The park and the river at Goldstream are now an established asset in our inventory of natural advantages. Any move to put the stream into a pipe, or desecrate the moss and lily-covered rock walls of the short stretch of highway from the entrance hill to the start of the Malahat climb will be strongly rejected, when the net result would be merely to save a few seconds of time by doubling the number of traffic lanes. Surely the seconds saved (for what?) could not begin to recompense the public for any loss of natural beauty in this cool, maple-shaded interlude in the journey up-Island.

Mr. Lea says it is something new for the government to take the environment into consideration in road-building programs. He should be given every encouragement in the form of a clear voice from the public that in Goldstream, of all places, the people's enjoyment of outstanding natural beauty should take precedence over providing another 10 miles an hour for automobile traffic.

JAMES RESTON

Men, Motives and Manoeuvres

WASHINGTON — The main thing is that a direct confrontation between the policies and military forces of the United States and the Soviet Union in the Middle East has been avoided for the time being, but you have to wonder how long the American people are going to be dragged along the brink by a jumpy government they no longer trust.

This town is seething with doubt and suspicion. The Watergate scandals, the disgrace of Vice-President Agnew, the resignation of Richardson, the firing of Cox and Ruckelshaus, the indictments of cabinet officers and White House aides, and the endless rumors of financial fiddling have all taken their toll.

The impression given here is of an uncertain administration, defying, the courts and Congress one day and submitting the next, announcing presidential speeches or press conferences in the morning and cancelling them in the afternoon, giving promises and breaking them, and over-reacting to imagined conspiracies at home and imminent catastrophies abroad.

Worldwide Alert

Let us assume, as I do, that the president ordered a worldwide alert of U.S. military forces solely because he had genuine reasons for believing that the Soviet Union was about to send Soviet troops to the Middle East. Assume also that this dramatic move was no contrivance to divert attention from the President's domestic troubles.

Things are bad enough without inventing dishonorable motives that can't be proved. The administration did not say so directly, but the fact is that it did have solid information (1) that the U.S.S.R. had put seven airborne divisions on "high alert"; (2) that the big transports that had been air-lifting war material from the Soviet Union to Egypt were suddenly withdrawn; and (3) that these transports were diverted to the Soviet Union close to the places where the seven Soviet airborne divisions were located.

Also Soviet diplomats, furious at the Israelis for grabbing more territory after the cease-fire, began talking in rough and threatening tones, and Sen. Scoop Jackson of Washington reports that Moscow delivered a highly ominous note to the U.S. on the eve of the U.S. military alert.

This was obviously a delicate moment. The Soviets were either manoeuvring to scare the Israelis back to the cease-fire lines, a typical use of Soviet power, or they were preparing to occupy Egypt, destroy the detente with Washington, and even risk war with the U.S.

The president chose to assume the worst. He did not merely alert the Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean; he alerted everything worldwide, and this raises

HENRY KISSINGER
. . . sees a symptom

some interesting questions. After all we have heard about the "hot line" between the White House and the Kremlin, the trustful personal relations between Kissinger and Ambassador Dobrynin of the Soviet Union, and the new "partnership for peace" between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R., are we to believe that the only way Nixon can send Brezhnev the message is to put American forces all over the world on alert?

Secretary of State Kissinger apparently believes the answer is yes. When all the facts can be made known, he told the reporters, "I'm absolutely confident that it will be seen that the president had no other choice as a responsible national leader."

If this is the kind of world we're living in, the crisis of confidence in the administration at home is all the more serious, for even when he is faced with a genuine problem, as he was by the Soviet manoeuvres in the middle of the night, he is accused of handling it in a spectacular way to defend himself.

If he had made any one of the concessions he was forced to make under fire, he might have avoided the present poisonous atmosphere. But now if he hands over the tapes, people say he has doctored them, and even when he staggers from one move to another, he is met with the cynical remark: "A crisis a day keeps impeachment away."

"It is a symptom of what is happening to our country," Kissinger said in his press conference, "that it could even be suggested that the United States would alert its forces for domestic reasons."

One reporter asked Kissinger if the Soviets thought the president was so weakened that they could take advantage of his weakness, and the Secretary of State didn't dismiss the notion.

Crises of Authority

"Speculation about motives is always dangerous," he said, "but one cannot have crises of authority in a society for a period of months without paying a price somewhere along the line."

The price at home, however, is higher than the price abroad. Overseas, Nixon still has immense power, and when he deploys it, skillfully or otherwise, he can still get results, as the improving Middle East situation demonstrates.

Not so in Washington. "There has to be a minimum of confidence," Kissinger said, "that the senior officials of the American government are not playing with the lives of the American people."

This is precisely true, and the tragedy is that even in this latest Middle East crisis, the President didn't get that "minimum of confidence," which is why, even when his brinkmanship works, the movement for a new government goes on.

The Pipeline, Then and Now

CALGARY: What a difference 15 years can make. If anybody in Ottawa had given the slightest encouragement to the construction of a crude oil pipeline to Montreal in 1958, the western sky would have been filled with the joyously flung hats of independent Canadian oilmen.

Today when Ottawa makes its bolt-from-the-blue announcement that it is thinking about building such a line, lead balloons create more excitement. And for two reasons. The independent Canadian producers no longer count for anything in the Canadian petroleum industry. Of the twelve companies which made the original submission in 1958, only three survive. The others have all been absorbed by the American companies.

The second reason is more fundamental. In 1958 Alberta was producing at less than half its capacity. Today it could sell an additional 300,000 barrels a day if it could produce them. The only way in which Alberta could supply Montreal would be by cutting off supplies to customers who have built refineries in the U.S. to utilize Canadian crude.

Significant Sign

A truly significant sign of the times is that despite Ottawa's flashing of the green light, nobody in Calgary is doing any arithmetic. And this in an industry whose denizens never consider themselves dressed without their slide rules and computer printouts. Nevertheless some prodding by this reporter got some numbers worked out and preliminary conclusions roughed in.

The first conclusion is that a pipeline to Montreal must go through Canada and not take the shorter and less costly U.S. route. To go through the U.S. would require prior approval by the Federal Power Commission in Washington. At least a year would be required to provide the engineering and economic studies that body would require before it would hear the application. It could spend another year kicking it back and forth.

Then it would probably reject the application because of the recent Canadian decision to cut off shipments to the U.S. Canada could only get oil for Montreal by cutting off middle-west U.S. refineries, many of which have no alternative supply. No American regulatory agency in its right mind would go for a proposition like that.

In 1958, Home Oil produced a series of engineering and economic studies and arrived at the estimate that the northern route could be built for $423,164,000, or $50 million more than for the southern route. It estimated it would require a tariff of 51.8 cents per barrel for the southern route, and some 60 cents for the northern.

Both figures were challenged by the major companies who argued that it would cost at least 70 cents a barrel to put Alberta crude into Montreal. That line would have been financed by 5½ per cent money. Today the cost might approach 10 per cent. Wages and equipment costs have also risen, along with the price of steel. The lowest guess now is that the line would probably cost around $600 million. With interest charges doubled on the project, the tariff would probably exceed 90 cents a barrel.

One result of all this would be that the Montreal refineries using Alberta crude would be unable to compete with Toronto refineries because the pipeline serving the latter was built when everything cost so much less and hence has a lower cost of service.

One other factor which is an interest suppressant is the realization that the line cannot be built unless all the refineries in the Montreal area are permanently converted to the use of Alberta crude—regardless of what happens to world crude oil or products prices.

The Montreal pipeline cannot be a sometime thing that will use Alberta crude at one time and imported crude at another. That would turn it into the biggest white elephant in Canadian history. And it would do it at a time when a huge surplus of refined products is being produced in New Brunswick, eastern Quebec and Newfoundland.

The huge new refineries now built and building there were constructed to take advantage of deep harbors which can berth the world's largest super-tankers. Products for the eastern seaboard of the U.S. will be loaded into the coastal tankers which can get into their shallow ports.

The impending shortage of gasoline and fuel oil in the eastern United States is a result of a severe shortage of refining capacity and has nothing to do with the world crude oil supply or demand. This shortage is likely to continue into the foreseeable future. The eastern Canadian refineries were built to supply this shortfall.

Frequent Surpluses

Refining history, however, shows that refineries frequently produce surpluses in one product or another. If they miscalculate what the weather will be next month they may run short of fuel oil and have a surplus of gasoline. Surplus gasoline has been the bane of integrated oil company existence. It starts gas price wars, encourages over-expansion of outlets, messes up their well ordered economic projections.

The real stumbling block which did the first Montreal pipeline proposal in was the fact that the people who own the Montreal refineries are also the people who won the oil being produced in Alberta and Venezuela and the Middle East and the people who own the tankers and the service stations.

For them the Montreal pipeline is a heads-you-win, tails-I-lose deal. If the government builds the line and the price of foreign crude rises, the government will force them, as producers, to take less for their Alberta oil production to keep Canadian prices down (vide the imposition of the export tax on crude to the U.S.). If the foreign crude price drops, they will have to drop their product prices to compete with the products produced in Newfoundland and New Brunswick by non-members of their club.

The major international companies fought the project for the same reasons 15 years ago. The difference today is that there is nobody in Alberta fighting for greater markets for Alberta crude because that battle has long since been won.

Day Care Centres

Ever since my letter concerning the provincial government's bias against the day care program for the 2-years-old appeared in your paper, I have received numerous reactions from various quarters. All these reactions were nevertheless predictable. To the lady who automatically assumed me as a Ms. (perhaps because I discussed child care?) and told me about how wonderful her home care unit was, I may owe an apology. My letter was not written to attack all the home care units as inferior to day care centres. I only attempted to expose the bureaucratic myth that two-year-old children are too young for a day-care centre.

I know for a fact that there are excellent home care units in Victoria. But I also know that many of them are ill-prepared to plan for such a contingency as the only available "staff" becoming ill or otherwise indisposed. Above all, I wanted to plead for the freedom of choice for parents who do wish to place their loving two-year-old children in a day care centre. As a matter of fact, the UVic Day Care Centre has been besieged with desperate applications from the parents who prefer day care centre services.

To other rejoinders who have chosen to harry my wife instead of me, I have only this to say: it is about time for wife and husband to be accorded individual dignity of acting and thinking alone, not always together. Besides, these detractors' comments were all nonsensical. They ranged from a familiar one of fearing to upset the provincial government to a perpetuated myth that even in a well-run day care centre, the staff-children ratio for the 2-year-old should remain 1 to 5 just as the case of a singled-handedly run home-care unit.

Against the proven results of the day care programs in Ontario, and against the proven results of the experiments of the UVic and Simon Fraser day care centres, the provincial government should immediately change the licensed status of the UVic Day Care Centre from "temporary" to "permanent." Furthermore, the present government of B.C. should be confronted with the glaring discrepancy between its campaign platform in the last election and its practice. Who pledged the 24-hour day care centre for children? — Yoshi Tsurumi, 1435 Richardson St.

On behalf of the Victoria Branch of the Navy League of Canada, would you please accept our sincere thanks for the space you have so kindly given to advertise our fund-raising campaign by means of the Presto Log Sale?

The response has been overwhelming, and as a result we have reached our quota. To those who have placed orders, thank you. Funds so raised will help to assure the continuance of the fine youth training offered. — (Mrs.) Flora G. Neal, Publicity, Navy League of Canada.

60 YEARS AGO

From the Times of October 31, 1913

Earlier than ever the voters of Esquimalt are preparing for the municipal election campaign. Councillor McAdams has aroused the antagonism of the ratepayers association by endorsing the abolition of the sale of sweepstake tickets. At a recent meeting of the association a resolution was passed urging that no action be taken against the sweepstakes and a petition is being circulated and largely signed asking that the sale be permitted in the municipality. Those in favor of the sweepstake point to the large number of people coming into the municipality on the street car to buy tickets. The town has never been so busy in its history, it is claimed.

Peace Comes to Balkans In Era of Co-Operation

By JONATHAN STEELE
The Manchester Guardian

At a certain stage of development, rivers cease to be barriers between countries and help to unite them. Or so it seems at least in the Balkans, that traditional powder-keg of European politics, which most northern Europeans still treat with a mild dose of ridicule if they bother about it at all. Almost unnoticed, in the space of a few years, international co-operation has begun to develop in the Balkans to an astonishing degree.

Two countries could hardly seem less fitted for useful contacts than anti-Communist Greece and President Tito's Yugoslavia. Yet Greece's development has reached the point at which no government in Athens can ignore the fact that Salonika is running out of fresh water supplies. Meanwhile only a few miles west of the city the River Vardar, which flows down the middle of southern Yugoslavia, runs into the Aegean Sea.

Uneven Flow

For two years now under the benevolent umpireship of the United Nations and with an Englishman in charge as project manager, a research project has been under way to tap the Vardar's waters. At the moment the river's flow is highly uneven and in the dry season at Gevvelija on the Yugoslav-Greek border is down to little more than a respectable trickle.

A series of dams will have to be built inside Yugoslavia, but irrigation projects in northern Greece and the thirsty population of Salonika will get most of the benefit.

Further north, the River Danube forms the natural frontier between Romania and Bulgaria. Although the two countries are fellow members of the Warsaw Pact, their few differences in recent years were big enough to prevent them agreeing on harnessing the river's formidable power.

In September, 1972, it took a summit meeting betwen President Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania and Todor Zhivhov, the Bulgarian head of state, for agreement to be reached at last on a proposal for a dam to be built across the Danube at Belene-Cioara.

The need for trade has been a factor in the last few years. It was certainly a factor behind what must have been one of the world's strangest marriages of convenience two years ago when Greece and the Albanian Communist regime of Enver Hoxha opened diplomatic relations.

This year, while many socialists in western Europe still favor a boycott of Greece, the Albanians ran an export pavilion at the Salonika trade fair.

On paper the Balkans form an unlikely patchwork of different regimes. They include four types of communism; Albania's pro-Chinese and anti-Soviet version, Yugoslavia's nonaligned "self-managing socialism," Bulgaria's pro-Soviet and anti-Chinese communism, and Romania's tentative independence as the only member of the Warsaw Pact which refused to join in the invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Sworn Enemies

To the south of these four are the sworn enemies of communism, NATO members Greece and Turkey. Yet among these six nations the only two which do not have full diplomatic relations with each other are Albania and Bulgaria. Their links are still frozen at charge d'affaires level.

All the Balkan countries, whatever their ideology, have authoritarian regimes. It is undoubtedly this factor which has enabled them to sink their differences in the interest of trade and economic development. The reslt is that this region is currently enjoying its most peaceful period of stability for centuries.

With the exception of Albania, where only a third of the population lives in towns, all the Balkan countries have been transformed into societies with the population roughly equally divided between the cities and the countryside.

Bilateral economic commissions are being set up by all the countries, with the exception of Albania, with the aim of improving trade. Last April the Greek government accepted the longstanding Bulgarian request for special transit facilities for its goods to pass through Salonika. The Romanians are hoping for similar facilities. They also are studying the possibility of helping the Greeks prospect for oil in the Aegean.

Greece and Bulgaria are building a radio relay line between their two capitals which will link the Middle East with central Europe. Bulgaria is to free electricity to Yugoslavia from its national grid, and the Romanians may help finance the enlargement of Yugoslavia's southermost port, Sar. A new railway is being built from Belgrade to the port which would give western Romania an outlet to the Adriatic instead of sending goods via the Black Sea.

Romania would like to go beyond the current network of bilateral economic links to create as many multilateral agencies as possible, and promote pan-Balkan co-operation. In Bucharest's view the Balkans should not just be a geographical definition, but should have a separate identity, a region with a variety of functioning regional institutions. Obviously this means giving the Balkans their own political dimension with frequent conferences of Balkan heads of state.

Romania's motives are clear enough. Bucharest is continuing the age-old policy of trying to keep great power influence out of the Balkans, and in this case this means the Soviet Union. Similar motives could activate Yugoslavia and Albania, plus the two non-communist nations, Greece and Turkey.

But a snag comes with political co-operation, and no other country has picked up Romania's call for multilateral political lines.

Greece and Turkey both fear that detente in the Balkans could be a device for weakening their role in NATO. The first Romanian call in 1957 for a Balkan summit came shortly before the Greeks and Turks decided to install American missile bases on their soil.

Even though the recently revived Romanian suggestion for a summit conference and a nuclear-free zone in the Balkans has a completely different connotation, Greece and Turkey remain suspicious. They probably also calculate that even if Soviet influence would be minimal in a Balkan conference, they would still be in a non-communist minority.

Among the communist nations Bulgaria is the main opponent of the idea of a multilateral Balkan conference for much the same reason as Romania wants it. With the full encouragement and support of Moscow, the Bulgarians politely reject the idea for fear that it would undermine Soviet influence in the area. The Bulgarians are about the most loyal allies of the Soviet Union in eastern Europe, possibly even outdoing East Germany.

Surprisingly, perhaps, Yugoslavia which is Romania's closest political partner on most issues does not support Bucharest on the need for a Balkan summit. Tito and Ceausescu hold annual meetings but this summer they came to no agreement on the issue.

The pragmatic Yugoslavs argue that it is still too early to push for a summit.

Tito also feels that focusing on Yugoslavia's role as a Balkan state may lessen the country's voice as a respected non-aligned country.

There the matter rests. Although there is no chance of the Balkans speaking yet with a single voice, bilateral co-operation is bound to go on growing as the major powers keep a watchful but distant eye on the area.

The Worst of Times . . . an Age of Foolishness

By JAMES EAYRS

"It is a time unlike any other in our experience. Events crowd in so fast, one upon another, that our emotions cannot catch up — much less our understanding."

"It's not easy to gather one's thoughts — so much, so fast, they come tumbling out in disarray."

So, in almost identical lead paragraphs, have two of America's most knowledgable journalists — the New York Times' Washington commentator Anthony Lewis, the veteran Vernon Royster of the Wall Street Journal — confessed to their inability to assimilate the rush of events during seven days in October.

No wonder. We have seen in swift succession the convulsion of the U.S. presidency, super-powers on nuclear alert, the Arabs prove their oil weapon's loaded, cease-fires vie with heavy fighting in the Middle East, and a second United Nations Emergency Force improvised for its unenviable duty between Arab and Israeli.

Minds are numbed by this massive overdose of news, the more since nearly all the news is bad. It is not the best of times, it is not the age of wisdom, it is not the epoch of belief, it is not the season of light.

A Dickens brought back to apostrophize our "Watergate-related" era might re-write the famous opening passage of A Tale of Two Cities, leaving out the hopeful parts: "It was the worst of times, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of darkness. . ."

Such pessimism has never been more justified of Richard Nixon on television last Friday evening. The President of the United States lashes out at its press, lashes out at its networks, brags of his grace under pressure: "The hotter it gets, the cooler I get. I have what it takes." An electronic Lear.

Suddenly, luridly, the terrible truth leaps off the screen. The President of the United States is mentally unstable. A paranoid in power.

●

A book could be written on the art of resignation. Perhaps one has been written. It would not be complete without reference to the demonstrations of the art staged by the Attorney General of the United States and his second-in-command. Both have been widely admired, but connoisseurs detect a difference. Elliot Richardson left the game. William Ruckelshaus left the team.

Resigner Richardson would not declare that President Nixon was wrong to have fired special prosecutor Archibald Cox, refused to charge the President with a failure to respect the claims of the investigative process."

To compare the Richardson resignation of October 1973 with the Eden resignation of February 1938—the comparison is heard everywhere in Washington—is to suppose that Anthony Elen would have happily served in some portfolio other than the foreign secretary's under Neville Chamberlain. That Eden would not have done.

"It cannot be in the country's interest," he wrote in his letter of resignation, "that those who are called upon to direct its affairs should work in an uneasy partnership . . ."

It is resigner Ruckleshaus, not resigner Richardson, who by his unequivocal refusal to accept another office in a Nixon administration and by clearly indicating his opposition to President Nixon on principle has provided the better demonstration of the art.

He is the first U.S. senior official in many years to avoid what has been termed "the effectiveness trap." This has been well described by James C. Thompson, Jr., East Asian specialist at the Department of State and the White House between 1961 and 1966:

"The most important asset that a man brings to bureaucratic life is his "effectiveness," a mysterious combination of training, style, and connections. The most ominous complaint that can be whispered of a bureaucrat is: "I'm afraid Charlie is beginning to lose his effectivness." To preserve your effectiveness, you must decide when and where to fight the mainstream of policy . . .

"The inclination to remain silent or to acquiesce in the presence of the great men—to live to fight another day, to give on this issue so that you can be "effective" on later issues—is overwhelming . . ."

It may seem that resigner Richardson has preserved his effectiveness the more effectively. He will have done so if the Nixon Administration should survive. That seems less likely than it did a week ago. The name of William Ruckelshaus may yet become a household word.

"The initiative leading to the creation of the United Nations Emergency Force in 1956, in which Canadian diplomacy and personnel had played so large a part, encouraged the hope and expectation that henceforth it was the nation's destiny to participate on a regular and continuing basis in para-military peace-making of the kind so successfully attempted in the Middle East.

"In this notion there resided much wishful thinking. The brilliance of Mr. Pearson's performance in the Suez crisis obscured one of its essential features. It was a one-night stand, an exceptional turn staged amidst circumstances unlikely to recur.

"Beyond that, the tendency of Canadians to see their country as a sort of saintly mediator pursuing, in the Swedish manner, an antiseptic path among the sordid manoeuvres of the powers, was to see it not as others saw it.

"Canadians had, and have, few qualifications for so unusual a mission. Upon the flimsy foundation of their claim to be free from what the Afro-Asian nations understand by "colonialism' they reared expectations altogether too grandiose.

"Canada's treatment of its aboriginal population does not compare particularly favorably with the record of other Western powers in their colonial possessions. . . . Afro-Asian leaders having any interest in the matter understand this very well, even if they are too polite to point it out.

"Again, the prospects for successfully repeating the UNEF adventure . . . are dimmed by the inescapable fact that Canadians have the wrong color of skin for the job . . . Finally, the national tradition is, on balance, a liability rather than an asset for para-military peace-making on a regular beat.

"In Latin American disputes Canada is unlikely to develop a taste for intervention; in quarrels among Commonwealth nations there is a reluctance to express opinions, let alone intrude troops; while Canada's membership in NATO is too easily exploited at the expense of whatever reputation it may have acquired as a disinterested mediator between East and West."

I confess to finding some merit in this analysis—if only because I have written it myself. Ten years ago.

The Games Presidents Play

RUSSELL BAKER

The first game was hide-and-seek. While the President closed his eyes and counted slowly to 100, the whole gang scurried around looking for hiding places behind trees and lawyers.

"98 . . . 99 . . . 100!" cried the president. "Ready or not, here I come!" he shouted. And, "There can be no whitewash at the White House!" he shouted.

Then he went upstairs and went to bed.

★ ★ ★

The second game was Monopoly, but there were ingenious twists.

The most ingenious was this: Before playing, everybody had to agree that it wasn't Monopoly at all, but hide-and-seek.

It was the form of hide-and-seek which was played on a Monopoly board, the president explained.

And there was only one other man in the world who could play it. This man's name was John Dean.

So John Dean was brought.

And the president explained that under the rules of this kind of hide-and-seek, Dean had to play with the president's dice.

They were classified dice. Top secret. Every time Dean rolled them, they came up showing the exact number of spots required to bring Dean to rest on the board's "Go To Jail" corner.

Nobody had ever before seen a man roll 30 on one throw of the dice. Some people said it wasn't even hide-and-seek. It made some of these people angry to see Dean winning all the jail time while men with short hair could be heard rustling behind lawyers, and not getting a fair shot at the pokey.

★ ★ ★

The third game was poker.

It was played with spools of recording tape. Everybody sat around a huge table covered with green baize. There were television lights, and most of the country watched the game.

The stakes became higher and higher. The tension became unbearable. Terrible tension lines tautened the president's face as, clutching his tapes close to his chest, he watched the other players push in their whole stakes, but when they all had done so his face lit with an expression of joy, and he began to scoop in the winner's pot.

Cries of rage were uttered, and dreadful threats. In poker, when a man is called, he has to show his hand, people said.

The president said that was true except for presidents.

When a president said he had won the pot, he explained, all the other players just had to believe him. That was in the Constitution.

Many persons were enraged.

★ ★ ★

To calm the enraged persons, the president suggested baseball.

He would let a baseball bat settle the issue once and for all, he said, and would abide by a definitive decision of the umpire.

On his first swing at the ball the president missed and the umpire called "strike one!"

On his second swing the president missed again and the umpire called "strike two!"

The president excused himself and went to a telephone. When he returned, he announced that the umpire had been fired, that he — the president — had become the umpire, and that all the other players' lockers had been sealed by the FBI so they would have to go home in their underwear.

This produced a roar of ineffectual rage from the players who were no match for the president's skills.

He ordered the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" to bring everyone to attention, announced that he would be too busy preserving the nation for any more game playing, and in his capacity as umpire declared everybody out in the ninth inning.

Attention Telephone Customers

WE'RE SORRY
WE'RE LATE
BUT...

Our installation and repair services have been slowed down in recent weeks by a union ban on overtime work and a series of work stoppages.

These actions have severely hampered our efforts to meet an unprecedented demand for service. To meet this demand, we have added more than 300 employees to our outside work force so far this year.

Every effort is being made to return service to normal as quickly as possible.

In the meantime, the company must give priority to installations of new residential and business telephones, transfer of telephones for people who are moving and out-of-service repairs.

Services such as installation of extension telephones, changes in party line status, relocation of telephones and addition of optional equipment are being reduced to a minimum for the time being.

B.C. Tel greatly regrets the inconvenience caused its customers and asks for their continuing co-operation.

Interest Rates Peaking Out But Mortgages Holding Firm

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

Although some interest rates appear to be peaking out, mortgate rates are expected to remain at 10 per cent or higher for the rest of the year, according to Victoria financial spokesmen.

"Short term rates may come down soon. They'll have to. But this will not affect mortgages or other long-term loans," one banker said.

"Demand for mortgages is still very brisk and we do not anticipate any change in the rate unless interest rates fall across the board. We do not expect this to happen."

A trust company manager agreed there could be some change in short-term interest rates but long-term loans and mortgages would probably remain at present levels.

He noted the deposit interest rate for 90-day money was 8.75 per cent, while it was only 8.5 per cent for 12-month deposits.

The current range for conventional mortgages is from 10 per cent to 10.5 per cent

High risk ventures go out at the top rate. This applies to commercial loans for speculative ventures such as motels as well as for houses outside urban areas.

The low rate of 10 per cent is the conventional level for bank mortgages to good risks and on two-thirds of the lending value of the house.

Banks generally charge 10.25 per cent for higher risk customers or for high ratio mortgages on 85 per cent of the lending value of the house.

The supply of mortgage funds varies from company to company but most in Victoria have an adequate supply.

All report the demand for mortgages in Victoria is brisk for this time of year. Normally there is a decline in demand after the peak summer real estate season but there has been little drop-off so far, reflecting a continuing active real estate market.

The Victoria financial outlook is a little more pessimistic than in Toronto where mortgage managers feel a decline in the interest rate could come before year's end.

They feel the interest rate has reached its upper limit and will be stable during the fall and may decline a moderate amount before January.

Victoria financial spokesmen said that all that appears to have happened is the upward pressure on mortgages has eased off. Talk of a decline in interest rates may just be wishful thinking by real estate developers.

A Victoria trust company manager said that as long as the inflation rate remained at 6 per cent or higher, the five-year deposit rate would have to be 9 per cent or higher.

"And with money coming in at 9 per cent, it would have to go out at 10 and a quarter. I don't see how interest rates can come down this year."

He added he was referring to long-term interest rates only.

High interest rates for short-term loans and deposits reflects the tight money situation in the United States. The White House has ordered interest rates high to cool off inflation.

The result is that companies are willing to pay almost any rate for short-term money rather than get locked into long-term bond issues at what they feel are artificially high rates of interest.

NEW PROGRAM 'INSTANT HIT'

The new federal governments Assisted Home Ownership Program is an instant hit in Victoria, says Chris Dowling, Victoria manager of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

"Applications are coming in at the rate of 100 a week and we are approving about 25 a week," he said.

The program is three weeks old.

Under the plan, persons with a family income between $7,500 and $12,600 can apply for mortgage funds at lower than the prevailing interest rate.

Persons earining $7,500 generally get mortgage funds at 8 per cent while those at the top level pay 9.5 per cent. Conventional mortgages run from 10 per cent to 10.5 per cent in Victoria with 10.25 per cent being the most common figure.

To be eligible, the family must have at least one child. Income refers to total family income, wages and salaries of both husband and wife.

Some applicants with family income of under $7,500 are also being considered, depending upon individual circumstanees, Dowling said.

There is no limitation on the size of house that may be purchased but in most cases they are modest dwellings.

"These are basically older houses being purchased under this plan, not new houses," he said.

Supply of funds is adequate. The plan is fully funded until year's end. Supply of funds in 1974 will depend upon the federal government's budget plans.

Benefits, besides the low interest rate, include a yearly grant of up to $300 to help meet mortgage payments.

Applicants must be able to pay 5 per cent down and the mortgage can be up to 95 per cent of the lending value of the house. There are a number of ways to meet the down payment qualification besides having cash in the bank.

Monthly payments are low because the mortgage is financed over 35 years. Most conventional mortgages are repaid in 25 years.

Revenue from metal production totalled $12,958,000, including 24,122 ounces of gold valued at $90 an ounce which has not been sold. This compares with $9,212,000 for the 1972 period.

Phillips Cables

Phillips Cables Ltd. reports earnings for the first nine months increased 35 per cent to $5,368,000, or $1.34 a share, from $3,929,000 and 99 cents a year ago.

The company said earnings do not include estimated profits on inventories arising from the 33-per-cent increase in the price of copper to 67 cents a pound as of Sept. 30.

Sales increased to $70,866,000 from $63,533,000 a year ago.

Anvil Mining

Anvil Mining Corp. has announced that net value of production from its Yukon Territory mine totalled $16.3 million for the first nine months of 1973 compared with $7 million for the same period of 1972.

Anvil is 60 per cent owned by Cyprus Mines Corp. of Los Angeles and 40 per cent owned by Dynasty Explorations Ltd. of Vancouver.

No net profit figures were reported because net value from the mine's production, after operating and debit expenses, is divided between Anvil's two shareholders.

George Weston

George Weston Ltd. reports net income for the nine months ended Sept. 30 of $20,162,000 or $1.78 a share, up from $12,064,000 and $1.04 a year ago.

A non-recurring profit of $67,000 and an income tax charge of $4,000 brought final profit to $20,225,000 for the latest period. A gain on sale of properties of $12,916,000, a non-recurring loss of $236,000 and an income tax credit of $87,000 brought final profit to $24,831,000, or $2.21 a share, for the 1972 period.

Sales rose 19.4 per cent to $947 million from $154 million.

Great Plains Development Co. of Canada Ltd., Calgary, had net earnings of $4.5 million ($1.39 per share) for the nine-month period ended Sept. 30, compared with $3.26 million ($1.01) for the same period last year.

The company attributed the increase to a 21-per-cent rise in gas sales and higher prices for oil and gas this year.

Algoma

Algoma Steel Corp. reports increased steel production and higher profit for the nine months to Sept. 30.

Profit was $18 million ($1.55 a share) up from $13 million ($1.12) a year earlier.

Raw steel production increased to 1,962 tons from 1,805 tons.

Algoma says in a report to shareholders the increased earnings came largely from higher operating levels and additional shipments at higher prices.

Fuel Search Bonanza To Airlines

FROBISHER BAY, N.W.T. (CP) — For an airline servicing the eastern Arctic, the energy crisis may eventually mean a real shot in the arm for business.

Much of the search for new North American reserves of oil and natural gas has shifted to Canada's North, and regional and smaller air services that operated on tight profitability margins in the 1960s see brighter days ahead.

Passenger and cargo traffic has increased as men and supplies are flown into the Arctic for exploration of minerals and fossil fuels. Gas has been found on islands in the central high Arctic and, although reserves are still below an economic volume, studies are being made for a possible pipeline down the east or west side of Hudson Bay.

This is all happening along the eastern flank of the Arctic, apart from more encouraging advances in the west around the Mackenzie River where plan for a $5-billion gas pipeline are in the final stages.

"We have great faith in the North," says James Tooley, chairman of Nordair Ltd. of Montreal, which opeates 23 aircraft and has six scheduled flights a week into this hamlet on Baffin Island, 1,300 miles north of Montreal.

Three flights weekly go on to Resolute, on Cornwallis Island 600 miles above the Arctic Circle and 2,200 air miles north of Montreal.

Nordair ranks second among Canada's five major regional airlines in gross revenue, behind Pacific Western Airlines of Edmonton which also flies to Resolute. It was the first, in late 1968, to introduce scheduled jet service to the Arctic.

Nordair's total revenue has more than tripled to $21,671,000 in 1972 from $6,719,000 in 1968. And Tooley expects it to hit $28 million this year.

A rise in earnings to $969,000 in 1971 was reversed last year when strikes were called by air traffic controllers and Nordair ground personnel. Earnings fell to $763,000 but picked up in the first half of this year to more than $1.3 million on revenues of $12,411,000.

Mineral and energy exploration are the keys to the North's future growth, Mr. Tooley said in a recent interview during a visit to Frobisher Bay.

"It's going to depend on how fast these mines develop, how fast they decided to bring gas out of the high Arctic and how fast the exploration for oil is successful.

"We see quite a growth, but perhaps at a little slower rate." Parallelling the exploration push into the North has been a noticeable increase in government presence, says Mr. Tooley. Education is being conducted more in the Arctic instead of sending students south to school.

Unfished inlets and lakes are beginning to lure anglers, and mountain climbing is another tourist attraction. Nordair estimates it flew at least 2,000 tourists into northern Quebec and Frobisher Bay this summer.

Despite the passenger increase, two-thirds of Nordair's northern business depends on freight and mail.

Since July it has had scheduled flights from Montreal into Quebec's multi-million-dollar James Bay hydro development project.

Now it seeks approval from Danish authorities for a Frobisher Bay-Sondre Stromfjord route as North America's first scheduled link to Greenland. And it hopes to establish a Frobisher Bay-Yellowknife route in a high Arctic trans-Canada service.

Pipe Profit Slips

VANCOUVER (CP) Trans Mountain Pipe Line Co. Ltd. reports net profits of $11,876,000 or $1.57 a share for the nine months ended Sept. 30, down from net profits of $13,065,000 or $1.72 a share in the same period last year.

Company president E. C. Hurd, in a report to shareholders, said daily deliveries during the first nine months of 1973 averaged $377,974 barrels of petroleum, 5,530 barrels of jet fuel and 7,739 barrels of propane to tankers for Japan.

The report said 70.2 per cent of the petroleum deliveries went to Washington State.

TROLLEYS MAKE FLYER SEE BLACK

WINNIPEG (CP) — Flyer Industries Ltd., a bus manufacturing firm owned 74 per cent by the Manitoba government, has had its share of difficulties in recent years.

But company officials are confident that after several years of operating in the red, Flyer will reach the break-even point by the end of next year.

One reason for their optimism is renewed interest in electric trolley buses.

At least seven Canadian cities have placed orders with Flyer for 90 vehicles due for delivery in late fall, and four more say they need another 49 coaches.

Flyer already has supplied Toronto with 151 trolleys, sent some to Hamilton and has orders for 37 more in Edmonton.

But the big orders come from the United States, where San Francisco, Philadelphia, Boston and Dayton, Ohio, have indicated a need for a total of 383 trolleys by year's end.

Sales projections for this year are just under $6 million, although a loss of $1.5 million is expected as well.

And Flyer has other problems to contend with, aside from its balance sheet.

A month ago, it seemed certain that the company would be supplying most of the needs of the U.S. but since then, Flexible Co. of Ohio entered the business and ended Flyer's five-year reign as the only electric bus producer in North America.

Thomas Ault, chairman and chief executive of Flyer, says the company had expected the appearance of a rival but also had expected certain trade changes to put Flyer on equal footing with the U.S. firm.

Because regulations of the U.S.-Canada Autopact Trade Agreement do not extend to coach vehicles, Flyer, as an off-shore supplier to the U.S., has to pay a four-per-cent duty on coaches going to American buyers. Flyer trolleys cost upwards of $50,000.

Ault says the company has been fighting to get the agreement changed to include coaches under the duty-free category "but so far, Ottawa hasn't made a move."

However, Ault said, "we pioneered, built and have proven our vehicle which has been accepted by the U.S. transit authority. Flexible will be starting from scratch."

Two Flyer prototypes now are running in San Francisco and one is in Dayton for testing by city transport authorities.

In Canada, Flyer has been waging a two-year battle with General Motors of Canada Ltd. which refuses to sell the Winnipeg-based company its angle-drive components, which some say are necessary for a smooth-riding diesel bus.

Flyer has offered to buy these components from GM under a licensing order or on a royalty basis, but GM still refuses to put them on the market.

Ault says the refusal means Flyer will not be able to offer both models of diesel buses — straight-end drive and angle-drive — to city transport authorities with differing specifications.

Despite these setbacks, Ault says 1974 could be the break-even year.

Many of this year's losses are due to non-recurring costs, he said. The major costs stem from the national rail strike and the company's new $2.5-million plant in suburban Transcona.

Under the agreement with AM General Corp. (AMG), a wholly-owned subsidiary of American Motors, Flyer produces diesel bus shells.

Automobiles— New Red Peril

MOSCOW (NYT) — As the dreaded Sunday drivers put newly acquired cars through their paces on these chilly autumn weekends, a Soviet traffic safety group is warning that only one-third of them have received proper driving training.

The private car driver, a relatively new development in the Soviet Union, has been viewed as a growing threat to life and limb on the nation's highways since car production took a sharp upward turn a few years ago.

In a nation where streets and roads were long dominated by trucks and buses, one-third of all traffic accidents are now being attributed to individual car owners. A national road safety conference was held in Moscow earlier this year, and widely publicized vehicular safety months have become a regular feature of the Soviet scene.

A popular television program on public health the other day took viewers into Moscow's largest first-aid hospital, where a physician reported that traffic-related personal injury cases continued to increase while industrial accident cases were declining.

With few auto schools operating in this country and driving tests apparently quite lax, the Soviet authorities have now taken steps to organize private drivers, as well as potential car buyers, into a national automobile society.

The society is expected to play an increasing role in the long neglected driver-training program, publicize the need for highway safety and, as an inducement, give members priority in the purchase of cars and in repairs. There are long waiting lists for both.

Car owners, now estimated at close to two million in this nation of 250 million, represent a new interest group that simply could not be left "to its own devices," as one traffic official put it.

Comprehensive accident statistics, like any other statistics likely to reflect poorly on the Soviet system, are not regularly published by the government. But the few guarded references that have appeared view the increasing number of private automobiles with concern.

The Italian-built auto plant at Togliatti, on the Volga River, began operation in 1970 and is approaching its designed capacity of more than 600,000 units a year. Previously only about 70,000 to 80,000 cars were available on the Soviet market each year for private purchase.

All Of a Sudden—We're Seventy Years Young

It's our seventieth birthday and we're proud of it. Seventy years is a long time — and we have so much to look back upon. We were pioneers here in British Columbia — knew so many of the early people — served them for years, watched their families grow up — saw the huge growth take place in our Province when so many people discovered what a paradise - on - earth it is and that nowhere else on earth can life be so pleasant. Yes, a lot of things have happened during the past seventy years, but we've never let the years age us. True that our roots in British Columbia have gone deeper and deeper — that the tree, so to speak, has become older and bigger and the branches stronger — but it stays forever young as it sheds the old leaves and sprouts new ones with each passing year.

People wonder why we don't act our age — because today we feel younger than ever. It's because we're caught up with all the change and excitement that's implicit in a vigorous and expanding Province like British Columbia. At seventy you really should be slowing down a bit, but age, as they say, really is a state of mind.

In Our seventieth year we have just opened another store (in Richmond), our fifth, we have added a whole new selling floor in our Downtown Vancouver store, added a new distribution warehouse to serve all our stores, and there is so much, much more to do and look forward to! In fact, we can hardly wait to get started on the next seventy years.

MANY FACETS TO TRUCE ROLE

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian forces will do everything from cooking to driving trucks when they join the new United Nations emergency force in the Middle East.

They will provide air transportation, communications, engineering, cooking, maintenance of their own equipment and supply water, fuel and other needs, Defence Minister James Richardson told reporters Tuesday.

He gave the details after External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp announced in the Commons that Canada has accepted a UN request to join the 7,000-man force in a support role.

Richardson said between 300 and 400 men could be in the Middle East within seven days.

They will have 350 Canadian vehicles, from jeeps to five-ton trucks, three Buffalo aircraft and three Huey helicopters as they supply all support for the entire UN force.

★

Most of the equipment will be flown to the Middle East although a sea shipment could be necessary later.

Richardson said it is too early to say the exact size of the Canadian force, but it will be between 1,000 and 1,500 men.

Many of the men would be taken from the Canadian Airborne Regiment based in Edmonton, the outfit designated to provide peacekeeping roles.

But the regiment, including support units, amounts only to about 900 men so the forces will have to draw specialist troops from other units. Signallers probably will come from a unit in Kingston, Ont.

About 600 men of the airborne regiment returned this week from routine desert training in California.

Richardson said the Canadians will be armed with side arms, rifles and machine-guns for defence of their base, the site of which has not been determined.

This is different from recent Vietnam observer experience when the men carried only pistols for personal protection.

Withdrawals Make Races Walkovers

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Election night worries ended Tuesday for seven civic election candidates in New Westminster, Abbotsford and Mission when post-nomination day withdrawals returned them to office by acclamation.

Art Mercer, chairman of the New Westminster school board, announced he had withdrawn nomination papers filed Monday for the Nov. 17 election.

His action resulted in the election by acclamation of incumbents Arthur Anderson, Agnes Culter and Ann Edworthy and of Donald McLachlan.

In Abbotsford, Jim Heathman withdrew from the district's aldermanic race, resulting in the three incumbents, Ted Gallvitz, George Gough and Lex Saxbe being returned for another term by acclamation.

In Mission, Ernest Wragg's withdrawal paved the way for the acclamation of Charles McPherson for a one-year term on council.

However, a total of 11 other candidates are seeking three seats on the district's council that are open for a full two-year term.

Bigger Paycheque For Haynes' Heir

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Federation of Labor approved a pay increase for its secretary-treasurer Tuesday, one day after Ray Haynes announced that he was quitting the post.

Haynes said the increase to approximately $20,400 a year from $18,500 a year was in line with the average 9.8 per cent general increase in wages across Canada.

Delegates to the federation's annual convention approved the increase without comment. Haynes will receive $329.50 a week until his resignation becomes effective at the end of November.

A successor was expected to be named Thursday or Friday to finish the remaining year of Haynes' term. Haynes made his surprise resignation announcement after eight years as the militant secretary-treasurer of the federation which, through affiliated unions, represents more than 200,000 workers.

The federation moderated its stand against the New Democratic Party's proposed labor legislation, but said it would continue its attacks on the new code.

Delegates approved a report from the executive council, which said that the federation shouldn't go out of its way to cause difficulties to the government, but should continue to press for changes in the labor code.

Even the hard-line left wing of the federation supported the report, although there were some delegates from all wings of the federation who voiced concern over the NDP's labor stance.

Rod Doran of the New Westminster Labor Council said there is a dangerous trend in the government "to steer itself away from the working people."

William Stewart, a member of the federation executive and an officer of the marine workers and boilermakers union, said it is time the government learned the federation cannot be taken lightly.

However, delegates cautioned against a split with the NDP.

Barbecue Gases Poison Hunters

CRESTON (CP) An inquest has been ordered into the deaths of two hunters whose bodies were found Sunday in their camper truck about 18 miles southeast of Yahk.

Andrew Johnson, 66, of Creston and George Pennington, 50, of Surrey were found dead.

Police said the men had been using a barbecue inside the camper and apparently died of carbon monoxide poisoning.

Date for the inquest has not been set.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

The court must be fair, equal and consistent, Judge William Ostler said in provincial court Tuesday in quashing an appeal for a discharge.

"When we have a charge under the same section of the same code and no really special or mitigating circumstances, then the court is failing to manifest ... consistency, impartiality and equality (if it grants a discharge in one case but not in another)," he said.

Ostler made his comments in sentencing Dean Carson Dennis, 18, of 3517 Lorraine, charged in Saanich Oct. 5 with possession of a small amount of hashish.

"There are cases, but I think there are few, to which discharges should apply," said Ostler.,

He said they should be reserved for special occasions, "otherwise the meaning and spirit of the discharge is lost."

For Dennis, the conviction would stand. Ostler suspended sentence and placed him on six months probation.

In other cases an 18-year-

In other drug cases an 18-year-old high school student Paul Urbaniak, 2321 Shakespeare, received a ssupended sentence and was placed on six months probation when he pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana.

The youth was charged Monday evening after police stopped a car he was driving in the 600 block Johnson and found some marijuana in the ashtray and a partly smoked joint of marijuana in the glove compartment.

Dennis Carl Dawe, 523 Springfield, was fined $75 for possession of marijuana. The 18-year-old youth was charged Monday night after police searched him in the 1100 block Langley and found a small amount of the drug on him.

Another $75 fine was handed down to Roy Matthew Puglas, 25, of Alert Bay, who pleaded guilty to possessing hashish.

Police said they found the narcotic in a cellophane bag in his jacket pocket while they were booking him Oct. 23 on a charge of causing a disturbance by being drunk.

Ostler fined him $75 on the drug charge, $10 on the other.

For stealing a $12 vise from a downtown store Stanley Schofield will spend the next two months in jail.

Schofield, 45, of 1029 North Park, pleaded guilty.

The accused entered Spencer's Store, 1110 Government, Monday at noon, hid the vise under his coat and left.

Robert Richard Boxall, 23, of Barrie, Ont., was placed on six months probation for shoplifting a $25 pair of shoes from Woolco, Oct. 2. Ostler also fined him $50 for failing to appear in court for sentencing on the charge Monday.

Minimum $200 fines were set for two companies which pleaded guilty to violating the Income Tax Act by failing to remit on time tax money deducted from employees' paycheques.

Multiple Holdings Ltd. and Saanich Arms Logging (1964) Ltd. both failed to remit May deductions of $1,099 and $105 respectively before the June 15 deadline.

Judge Edmond St. Jorre sentenced a 17-year-old drug trafficker to five months in jail followed by one year's probation.

Manjeet Singh Baines pleaded guilty on Oct. 16. Police said he sold $21.90 worth of hashish to a juvenile and an adult at Colquitz Creek park Sept. 7 while about 30 youths from a nearby school looked on.

St. Jorre recommended Baines serve his sentence in a forestry camp.

★ ★ ★

In the court section of Judge Harold Alder, Allan Joseph Baldwin, 23, of 306-734 Lampson, was prohibited from driving for three years and fined $350 when he pleaded guilty to driving while impaired on Sept. 1.

He was also fined $250' for failing to have insurance on his automobile.

Charges arose after police investigated an accident in the 300 block Niagara when a car struck a parked vehicle causing about $2,500 total damages.

Mistakes Happen

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Her son died last July, a victim of gang violence, but police still send Mrs. Pauline Redmon letters saying her boy is a curfew violator. City gang workers say the mistake happens often. Sherman Culbreth, 14, died from a shotgun blast. Police say apparently another boy has been using Culbreth's name. Curfew here is 10:30 p.m. on weekdays and midnight on weekends.

Prison Service Shakeup Demands

OTTAWA (CP) — A New Democratic MP called Tuesday for dismissal of the commissioner of the Canadian Penitentiary Service, Paul Faguy, while a Conservative demanded a complete "shake-up at the top" of the service.

Frank Howard (NDP — Skeena) said Faguy knows nothing about running a penitentiary and should be fired.

John Reynolds (PC — Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) called for the shake-up and added that Solicitor-General Warren Allmand should be fired if he shows he cannot rectify problems that are the fault of the prison service.

Both men made their statements in interviews after a heated Commons exchange with Allmand about British Columbia penitentiary in New Westminster, scene of continued disturbances and tension recently.

In the Commons Howard demanded an inquiry into the penitentiary service headquarters here. Reynolds and Erik Nielsen (Yukon), the Conservative justice critic, demanded an independent inquiry into the B.C. prison.

★ ★ ★

Nielsen warned that action must be taken before something really serious happens.

Allmand denied allegations from opposition members and announced that another 43 prisoners, including eight of the most difficult, have been transferred from the penitentiary since the weekend.

That was in addition to 60 transferred from the maximum-security institution after a recent riot.

Howard told a reporter that he is referring to troubles in more than one prison when he demands the dismissal of Faguy. The penitentiary service under Faguy is making difficult the job of prison directors by not giving firm direction and the directives it did give often showed it had no firm policy line, he claimed.

With the service acceding to prisoner demands, prisoners are demanding more and more, he added.

What they needed was firm discipline and a clear policy from above.

Danger Pay For RNs?

OTTAWA (CP) — Danger pay for federal nurses in the North is being studied by the government, Treasury Board President C. M. Drury told the Commons Tuesday.

Replying to Wally Firth (NDP — Northwest Territories), Drury said an arbitration tribunal has set a pay scale for the nurses and they get special allowances to cover the higher cost of living in the North. The 2,200 nurses have complained that the arbitration award gives them lower pay than their provincial counterparts. Last week several hundred booked off "sick" in protest.

Drury said Tuesday the government is looking at the question of danger pay where nurses are subject to risk.

Markup On Beef Spurs Queries

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition MPs reacted skeptically Tuesday to assurance by the food prices review board that wholesale cuts in beef prices are being reflected in reduced retail costs.

Board economists Gordon Burton and Cyril Hodgins told the special Commons food price committee that they are satisfied that recent wholesale beef price cuts are being passed to consumers.

Margins between wholesale and retail prices are roughly the same as they have been in the past, Hodgins said in reply to questions by Alf Gleave (NDP—Saskatoon-Biggar).

A drop of between 25 and 30 per cent in wholesale prices following a recent flood of United States beef imports had been passed along in price reduction to consumers.

Gleave said outside the meeting that he disagreed with the economists. People were paying more for beef than the wholesale price reduction should warrant.

Earlier, board chairman Beryl Plumptre said she is concerned that such price reductions be passed along, and that her six-month-old board is "watching closely" to see that they were.

But it was still too early to recommend government action to control food costs.

Instead, the board would "continue to watch the situation closely.".

"Of course, the hard fact remains that consumers today are paying a lot more for most food items than they were a year ago.

Grace MacInnis (NDP—Vancouver-Kingsway) suggested that consumers are beginning to feel threatened by the "perpetual study group" approach to food prices.

Had the board no recommendations on methods of stabilizing farm production?

Plumptre replied that such things are difficult. Stabilized farm production, for instance, may cost farmers export markets and cut into domestic employment.

Pompidou Meets Heath

LONDON (Reuter) — President Georges Pompidou of France and British Prime Minister Edward Heath will hold talks Nov. 16-17 on European economic and security questions, the Middle East and other major world developments.

The discussions will take place at Chequers, the prime minister's official country residence in Buckinghamshire near London, Heath's office announced.

U.S. Dole Declines

WASHINGTON (AP) — United States welfare rolls edged downward in fiscal 1973 for the first time in seven years. Government figures show that 14.8 million persons were receiving public assistance at the end of last June, a decrease of 249,000 or 1.7 per cent fewer than a year ago.

Costs for federal-state welfare programs totalled $19.4 billion for the 12-month period, an increase of $1.1 billion or six per cent over fiscal 1972.

Abuses Bill Dies

OTTAWA (CP) — To nobody's surprise the government has made it plain it will not proceed with a bill toughening the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The bill, which would have cut off benefits to persons who quit or were fired from their jobs, was given first reading in the Commons Jan. 17.

It was an obvious reaction to the October, 1972, federal election campaign when abuses of unemployment benefits were a major issue.

Introducing the bill, Manpower Minister Robert Andras estimated it would save the government more than $1 million a year and cut down a major source of the fund's abuse.

However, strong opposition to the bill was voiced by the New Democrats and proceeding with it would have endangered the life of the minority Liberal government.

An aide to Government House Leader Allan MacEachen confirmed Tuesday that the bill will be allowed to die.

"I do not know what the form of burial will be, but it will be fully parliamentary," MacEachen had told the Commons when asked if the bill will be cremated without ceremony.

Pat on Back—With a Knife!

OTTAWA (CP) — Grace MacInnis wielded a velvet-covered club in the Commons Tuesday when second-reading debate resumed on a bill to beef up the Canada Pension Plan.

She complimented Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde for designing a bill that was good "as far as it goes," but then started hammering at the government for equal pension rights for women.

The bill removes the two-per-cent ceiling on annual escalation of pension benefits and ties the plan to the cost of living. It also raises, in stages, maximum pensionable earnings from $5,600 to what the annual average earnings will be in the 1980s.

It was regrettable, however, that the government had not sought other changes, especially to provide pension equality for women.

Survivor benefits should be equal in all respects and the plan should not contain references to the sex of pension plan contributions, she said.

The plan now provides a 100-per-cent pension for a man, and if his wife dies, he continues to collect the full amount. However, if the man dies, he continues to collect the full amount. However, if the man dies, the pension is cut to 50 per cent.

MacInnis said the government has ignored part of the 1970 report of the royal commission on the status of women — the part dealing with pensions.

"It's not enough for this government to go around paying lip service to the rights of women."

Housewives in particular were oppressed because they were not entitled to contribute to the pension plan.

MacInnis said marriage is a full partnership and housewives, as equal partners, should be entitled to pension benefits.

She said each woman wants to stand "economically and emotionally on her own two feet" and the government could facilitate this by allowing housewives to contribute to the plan.

"I suppose they can go through the old man's pockets . . . but I don't think that's a fair position to put a woman in."

TV Power Grab Slammed

Opposition members of the legislature criticized legislation setting up the new department of transport and communications Tuesday, saying it gives too much power to the government, to the point of taking over the press and cablevision programming.

The legislation, for the first time co-ordinates the activities of the government in the transportation and communication fields under one jurisdiction. But it is the potential power of taking over businesses which struck the opposition spokesmen as being excessive.

Alex Fraser (SC-Cariboo) said the bill gives the government power to take over such firms as Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd., Pacific Western Airlines, B.C. Telephone and Greyhound Bus Lines.

He said the people of the province did not vote to give the government that kind of power in the 1972 election but that the government is taking it upon itself to assume that power.

Fraser said Transport Minister Robert Strachan has already made "a mess" of the B.C. Ferries system, as the government has of the B.C. Railway, and that the Socreds would not support the departmental legislation in any phase of consideration.

Allan Williams (L-West Vancouver-Howe Sound) said his party's main concern is the potential control of the government over cablevision and television channels. This power should stay with the federal government, he said.

Williams did not agree with the suggestion by Fraser that the NDP government would take over B.C. newspapers through the legislation, saying he considered the B.C. press to be "too responsible" to allow that to happen.

The Liberal termed the legislation "a truly unusual step", although perhaps not all that unusual in light of some of the NDP government's other actions.

Conservative interim leader Scott Wallace said the powers under the bill for the cabinet to direct the duties to be undertaken by Strachan's department are too wide.

He said the powers under the bill for the provincial government to control the communications systems in the province are "far beyond the range of powers which should be available to it.

The bill's powers need checks and balances which are not written into it he said.

U.S. Lifts Army 'Alert'

STUTTGART, Germany (UPI) — The United States today took its European-based army and air forces off the alert provoked by the middle East crisis, U.S. military officials said.

But a headquarters spokesman for the U.S. European command in Stuttgart said he could not comment on the status of the U.S. 6th fleet forces in the Mediterranean, which presumably remained on the six-day-old "precautionary alert."

"I can confirm that the U.S. Air Force, Europe, and the U.S. Army, Europe, are off the alert as of today," the spokesman said in response to a telephoned query.

CORONER JURY PAY RAISED

People who serve on coroner's juries will be paid $10 a day, Attorney-General Alex Macdonald announced Tuesday at the same time as announcing the formation of a New Westminster coroner's district.

He said an order-in-council passed by the cabinet sets out a long list of fees. Witnesses at coroner's inquests will now get $6 a day, $7 for professional witnesses, the same scale as in Supreme Court criminal cases.

For the first time now, coroner's jurors in B.C. will be paid $10 a day, plus the necessary expenses if travel is involved. These fees are to be paid by the municipalities involved.

The cabinet order will force Surrey, Delta, Burnaby, Coquitlam, Port Moody, and Port Coquitlam to share costs of coroner's services now paid solely by the city of New Westminster.

The annual salary of New Westminster coroner Doug Jack has also been boosted to $20,000 from its present $15,000-$16,000 range, he said.

Previously, Jack has held inquests on deaths that occurred outside New Westminster, but the city has had difficulty in getting those areas — particularly Surrey and Delta — to help pay costs.

The interruption is required to permit linemen to convert the distribution system to 25,000-volt operation.

B.C. HYDRO

BURSARY RAISED

The Queen Elizabeth II British Columbia Centennial Scholarship will be raised to $7,000 from $5,000 under legislation introduced in the house Tuesday.

The amendments introduced also allow a recipient of the annual scholarship to apply, during the second year of his study, for a further $3,500 scholarship to be paid in the third year of his studies.

The scholarship, which was set up in 1972, is awarded to a graduate of any B.C. university who is a resident of B.C. and "is a person of unusual worth and promise" for study in the United Kingdom.

Gulf Island Land Stays Frozen

The 10-acre freeze on developments on the Gulf Islands will be maintained for the time being, Municipal Affairs Minister Jim Lorimer told the legislature Tuesday.

Lorimer, questioned on the subject by Allan Williams (L—West Vancouver-Howe Sound), said the freeze will remain until "such action as is deemed necessary" is taken on the recent report of the legislature's committee on municipal matters. The committee recommended an agency of the government be given responsibility to approve planning and development of the Gulf Islands.

In other questions during the Tuesday question period, Resources Minister Bob Williams said he would "take under advisement" a question from Pat McGeer (L—Vancouver-Point Grey) about whether the government will conduct public hearings on the route to be taken for a new B.C. Hydro power line to run through Vancouver Island.

Williams said the Environment and Land Use Secretariat is holding discussions with B.C. Hydro on a variety of subjects, inferring that the new Hydro line is one of the items being talked about.

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald repeated earlier indications that regulations which will allow for the establishment of neighborhood pubs in B.C. are still being worked on and have to be considered yet by the three members of the new B.C. Liquor Board.

And Premier Barrett told Pat Jordan (SC—North Okanagan) there are no immediate plans to raise the $50 per year grant which goes to elderly renters. Jordan had suggested the grant be raised to $100 per year.

School Vote In Cowichan

LAKE COWICHAN — A $720,000 school building referendum will go before voters in Lake Cowichan School District Nov. 17.

If passed, the referendum will provide funds to build a seven-room elementary school on a new site and to refurbish part of Stanley Gordon intermediate school for use by secondary school students.

Minor upgrading of Youbou's Yount elementary is also included.

The department of education earlier rejected the school board's request to have all of Stanley Gordon converted for secondary school use, and also rejected plans to build special community facilities at the new elementary school.

SENIORITY IN REVERSE

VANCOUVER (CP) — The president of the Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. said a guaranteed annual wage formula to give laid-off auto industry workers 95 per cent of their regular wages has created unforeseen problems.

Roy F. Bennett told a board of trade luncheon "the unions now are pressing for reverse seniority in layoffs."

He said older workers are demanding that if anyone is to be paid for not working, the privilege belongs to those with the longest service.

"It's humorous, but also it's tragic. It shows the increasing trend in the country not to work."

Bennett also said car prices will rise but maintenance cost will be sharply reduced for 1974 models, and that 1973 cars have required 18 per cent less maintenance than 1970 models.

The annual change of models gradually is giving way to more stability in design, he said, but much of the saving from such stability is being eaten up by the necessity to add emission-control and safety devices required by law.

Bennett said the emission devices have cut gasoline mileage but research will help to correct this problem.

"We can and will make some improvements," he said, "but in all reality we see some other form of engine as the answer, possibly developed in 10 or twelve years."

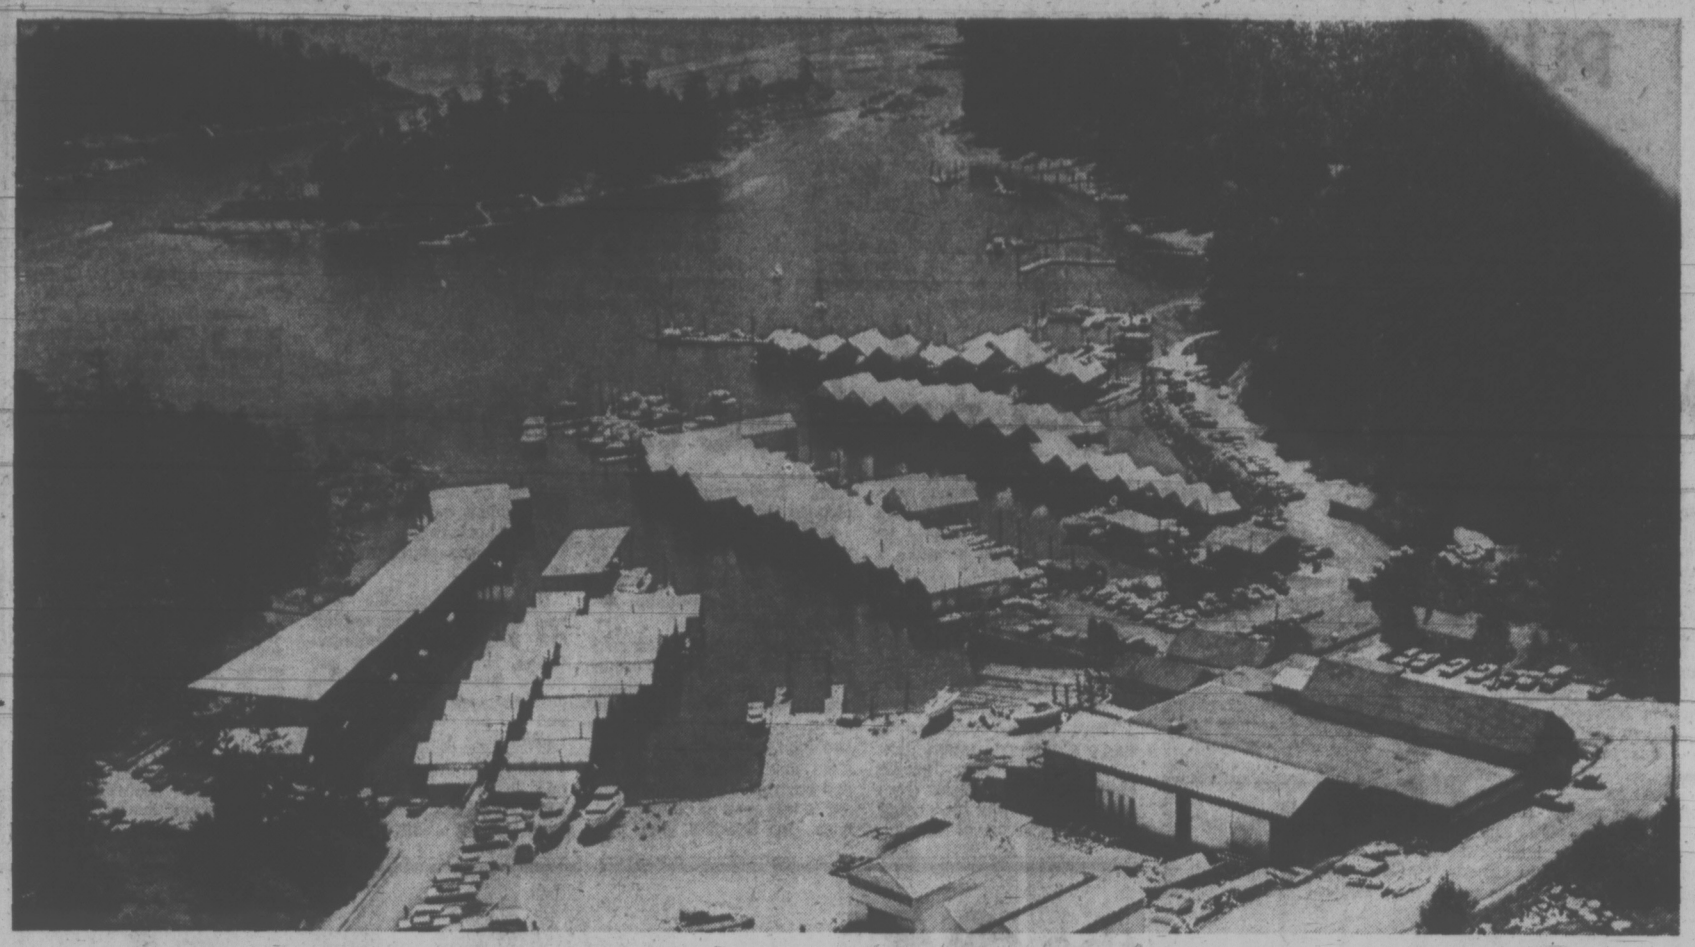
If you don't grow . . . you die! This is the defence by marina operators in North Saanich to mounting criticism of their premises and their plans for expansion. A petition presented North Saanich council claims something should be done to force better designs and better looking establishments. Reporter Bruce Obee looks at the problem and lists the pros and cons.



Heavily criticized Saanich Peninsula marina, Canoe Cove has applied for additional 3½-acre water lot to expand

'They Have Strong Bylaw But They Don't Enforce It!'

A group of North Saanich waterfront residents has asked the municipality to crack down on "haphazard" marina development by forcing marina owners to make drastic changes in their expansion policies.

Canoe Cove resident Bob Beer, operator of Lands End Charters, has circulated a petition which states: "Canoe Cove Marina has in the past, as evidenced by the motley array of non-standard and poorly constructed boathouses and floats, displayed an almost total disregard for the esthetic and environmental values of the area."

The petition has been signed by 60 North Saanich residents and presented to the municipal council.

With the petition, Beer has provided photographs of marinas in Vancouver and Nanaimo which he believes should be held up as examples for North Saanich and Sidney marina owners.

●

"We think the development generally has been far far behind the development in other places,' said Beer.

The petitioners are asking council to apply for a local initiatives grant to finance a thorough survey of all marina development in the municipality.

The North Saanich marina bylaw, passed in 1966, is probably the toughest in any Greater Victoria municipality, said Beer.

"But the municipality doesn't enforce it," he said.

Most marinas in the area were well-established before 1966, he said, but a lot of development since then has not been in compliance with the bylaw.

The petitioners are also attacking Canoe Cove's application for a breakwater and more boathouses.

Canoe Cove manager Sam Vennard said the marina's expansion plans do not include a breakwater or more boathouses.

Vennard has asked for permission to build a floating perimeter to protect the moored boats from swells created by passing boats.

He has also applied for an additional 3½-acre water lot for moorage. There are 275 boats moored at Canoe Cove.

But under the North Saanich marina bylaw, Vennard explained, only 20 per cent of the water lot may be used for moorage.

"The public has been totally misinformed," said Vennard, "we continually bend over backwards to comply with their (North Saanich) requirements.

"We simply have to expand. If you don't grow, you die," he said.

Many of Canoe Cove's expansion problems are common to all marinas in Sidney and North Saanich waters.

Alan Calvert, manager of Westport Marina in Tsehum Harbor, believes people petitioning marina development have "nothing better to do."

"They talk about disturbing the wildlife," he said. "You know we get more ruddy deer and pheasants now than we've ever had."

Westport, owned by West Vancouver's Thunderbird Marina Ltd., accommodates 200 boats and "it's just beginning to pay for itself," said Calvert adding there will be facilities for 400 boats when completed.

During the first two years of development, before any floats were installed, said Calvert, taxes "tripled."

"Without business, who in the hell is going to pay for the municipality?" he said.

Mayor Trevor Davis said marinas contribute "very little" revenue to the municipality through taxes.

"A couple of big houses will provide as much in taxes," he said.

Most of the municipality's marinas were in business before the marina bylaw was passed, he said, and "they would look a lot different" if the bylaw was there first.

"Where there's water there's going to be boats," said Wally Jeune of Copeland Marine Ltd. in Blue Heron Basin.

●

When Jeune began planning his marina seven years ago there were "no regulations." But he didn't begin construction until about a year ago and has had "a lot of trouble" complying with the bylaw.

His two and three-quarter-acre water lot will accommodate 80 or 90 boats when all the floats are installed, he said.

Bosun's Marina Ltd., formerly Clarke Brothers Marina Ltd., is the municipality's largest.

To meet the public demand, said manager Don White, mooring facilities will be doubled. There are 200 berths, he said, adding the actuual size of the marina complex will not be doubled.

"There is no immediate plan to change the configuration dramatically from what you see now," said White, "The plan that was approved by every conceilvable department and initially produced by the Clarke Brothers (in 1970) is what we're working," he said.

Recreation is rapidly becoming an industry, said White, and marina owners are obligated to meet the public demand.

"Every day we get inquiries from local people requesting wharfage," he said.

Many members of the boating community consider the Gulf Islands the world's best cruising area and, in terms of land use, marinas are of primary importance, said White.

Saanich and the Islands MLA Hugh Curtis agrees the need for recreation is compelling marinas to expand although he admits there is a "genuine conflict of attitudes" between the boatowner who needs a place to store his boat and the waterfront resident who believes scenic coves should be left alone.

With more people becoming involved in recreational boating, said Curtis, "it may be that in time they (marinas) will have to be located a little further out. There are limits in any given location."

Curtis also believes North Saanich and Sidney marinas assist the economy of the area through sales and employment.

The government's interest in getting more people on to Gulf Island marine parks on a daily basis is an indication of its support for marinas in and around the islands, he said.

"It's a healthy problem," said Curtis.

Alan Dickinson, manager of Sidney's Van Isle Marina with 400 berths, sympathizes with nearby residents.

As more floats and boathouses are added to existing facilities, said Dickinson, the value of nearby property drops.

Bob Murphy, of Pemberton Holmes Ltd., agrees some of the necessary unsightly facilities at marinas influence waterfront property values.

Murphy sold a home in North Saanich which looks directly across Tsehum Harbor at Van Isle Marina.

"It definitely affected the sale," he said.

He sold another home, worth $100,000, which overlooks Westport Marina.

The location of the marina didn't affect the price, he said, but it cut down the number of prospective buyers.

Murphy was also involved in the sale of two-and three-bedroomn condominiums, known as the Breakwater Development, next to Van Isle.

●

The marina had no effect on the sale of those units, priced at $54,000 and $58,000, because the buyers are boaters and used to looking at marinas, he said.

Sidney Ald. Peter Malcolm is "100 per cent in favor of any legitimate marina expansion."

"It's a secondary industry," he said, "It's attracting money from all over the place."

Without the business generated by tourists and boat owners who use the marinas, said Malcolm, Sidney's economy would suffer.

Last summer government wharves at the foot of Beacon Avenue were badly in need of repair and tourists refused to use them, he said. As a result the merchants lost business.

PUT SERVANTS ON SOIL MP URGES

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Alberta MP Ken Hurlburt told the House of Commons Tuesday federal academics who formulate government agricultural policies should be forced "back to the land" every few years to ensure they don't lose touch with day-to-day farming.

Hurlburt (PC — Lethbridge) put his demand to the Commons in the form of a resolution based on "urgent and pressing necessity" claiming that farming problems are being aggravated because Ottawa's farming policies are often thought up by "faceless public servants" far removed from the land.

His motion suggested every seven years or so those public servants involved should be forced to spend one or two years on a farm, ranch or feed-lot to re-acquaint them with everyday farm problems.

Hurlburt's motion was greeted with desk-thumping applause from both Progressive Conservative and New Democratic Party Opposition benches — one of the rare instances since the 1972 federal election when NDP members have cheered a Conservative MP.

However, the motion failed to get unanimous Commons consent when some Liberal members shouted the more or less automatic "no" to the special motion.

Moving Back-to-Land Gets Harder

WINNIPEG (CP) — Getting started in full-time farming is difficult now and it's going to get even more difficult, a University of B.C. professor told the Canadian Bankers Association at a B.C. conference ended Tuesday.

Prof. G. R. Winter said a study shows capital requirements for the average farm in Canada climbed from $27,389 in 1961 to $44,258 in 1966, and now has reached the $76,500 level.

Debt, as a proportion of total farm assets, rose from 9.5 per cent in 1960 to 20.8 per cent a decade later. The number of farms in Canada has been dropping at the rate of about 2 per cent a year since 1941.

Prof. Winter, head of the university's department of agricultural economics, said the trend to fewer farmers has gone too far and is one reason why there is a shortage of beef and a huge grain surplus.

He predicted an increasing proportion of part-time farmers , some of whom would be attracted by high commodity prices while others are more interested in the farm environment and an alternate lifestyle.

George Owen, chairman of the Federal Farm Credit Corp., said not everyone who wanted to enter full-time farming has the capacity or experience needed to make a success of it.

Owen, who noted some evidence of a back-to-the-land movement in Canada, said, "desire alone is not sufficient to enter any business or profession."

There was no evidence to support the contention that many credit-worthy people seeking to enter farming were being turned away by lending services. Feeling of agricultural fundamentalism only clouded the issue.

Prof. Winter said there is an over-supply of people wanting to enter full-time farming and the problem appears insoluble.

"We cannot easily generate more farm land, and if credit were expanded, land prices might well be inflated in direct proportion to the expansion of credit."

He said foreign ownership and control of Canadian farming is less than of other industries. In 1965-1968, the percentage of income earned by non-resident owners from Canadian agriculture, forestry, fishing and trapping was only 20.7 per cent.

By comparison, the level was 55 per cent in mining, 63.8 per cent in manufacturing, 38.7 per cent in services, 30.6 cent in finance, 37.4 per cent in retail trade and 35.7 per cent in wholesale trade.

The conference was the first one to be devoted by the Bankers' Association specifically to farm credit.

Country Bankers Lacking

WINNIPEG (CP) — Rural bankers need more training to improve their understanding of agriculture, the farm credit conference of the Canadian Bankers' Association was told Tuesday.

Gordon Yule, general manager of Ontario Harvesters Systems Ltd., said a survey of his firm's customers gave a low rating to their local bankers' grasp of farm problems. Only 15.4 per cent rated it excellent.

Yule, whose Guelph-based firm is a Canadian-owned dealer for silos and other feed lot equipment, said bankers and farm suppliers must provide more service to their farmer customers.

He said the modern farmer is a businessman with resources excelling most other small businesses and is a much better credit risk than the farmer of a decade ago.

Camille Moreau, president of the Quebec Farm Credit Bureau, said there must be co-operation between state and private lending institutions for medium-term loans.

Farm Credit Merger Mooted

WINNIPEG (CP) — Farmers and agriculture would be better served by a federal-provincial credit program administered by the provinces while operating within national guidelines, the Canadian Bankers' Association was told Tuesday.

William Hamilton, associate executive secretary of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, said such a program would include provision for short, intermediate and long-term credit packages complete with counselling services.

Hamilton said the federal government could furnish the bulk of the funds to provincial agencies. The federal authority would participate in developing credit policy on a national basis, with the credit actually provided and administered at the provincial level.

He said if traditional lending services wanted to participate in such a system, the federal-provincial program could work with them by providing guarantees and by developing expertise and counselling.

Hamilton said chartered banks are the largest lenders of operating or short-term credit to the farm community but many farmers feel the banks have not moved far or fast enough to keep up with their credit needs.

Banks have made some improvements in services to farmers, using more agriculturally-oriented management at the local level, but such modifications do not meet requirements as the farm sees them.

He said consideration should be given to developing the proposed federal-provincial cerdit program into a farmer-owned co-operative system, similar to farmer co-operative credit systems in the U.S. and some parts of Europe.

Israel, U.S. To Analyze Red Missiles

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is expected to share in the knowledge gained by Israel in its capture of an advanced Soviet-built missile unit.

U.S. government sources report the Israeli army captured intact an SA-6 anti-aircraft system, which inflicted heavy losses on Israel's U.S.-equipped air force in its first combat test during the latest Middle East war.

U.S. military officials are anxious to learn in detail how the SA-6 operates, and how to foil it. It is believed U.S. experts may work with Israeli technicians in studying the system.

The deadly accuracy of the Soviet-built weapons alarmed both Israeli and U.S. military officials.

For a Forgettable Film Lineups Twice a Night

Some purely personal, periodic opinions on life's little pleasures:

The Movies

A show business axiom as relevant in Victoria as it is in Times Square or Leicester Square holds that the sure way to make music at the box office is to have a show that's been banned or threatened with a ban.

Those twice-nightly lineups at the Fox Theatre for "Oh! Calcutta!", which enjoyed the distinction of being actually confiscated by the police for a day or two, makes the point once more.

"Oh! Calcutta!" is, in fact, a tedious lot of garbage, as tiresome, tasteless, vulgar, coarse and yawn-inducing a film as any to play here in years. It consists largely of a series of interminable stag-party sketches that occasionally earn the misplaced guffaws of the acne set, but are so barren of any genuine or satirical comedy that an adult patron is moved to wonder that such names as Kenneth Tynan, Jules Feiffer and John Lennon should be among those taking the blame.

The single redeeming segment, a mildly erotic ballet, performed in the nude, is a free and beautiful exercise that, unhappily, only dramatizes the juvenility of the rest of the film.

Books

The remarkable flow of Canadian guide books, the newest trend in publishing, continues unabated. Several are well worth recommending.

Mitchell Press has put out a revised, third edition of Will Dawson's "Coastal Cruising" which answers almost anything you'd want to know about skippering a small boat from Puget Sound to Alaska. I think Will should have put in more of his personal adventures and his own personality, but as a matter-of-fact, informative guide to pleasure cruising over 100,000 square miles of Pacific waterways the book is in a class by itself.

There's also a third edition of "Where to Eat in Canada," compiled by Anne Hardy, a pleasant reminder that we're coming of age in restaurant dining. There's a particularly good list of fine eating places in Montreal and Toronto, though I suspect the book falls down in listing regional restaurants. Only five are noted, for example, in our town — Le Coq Au Vin, The Empress, Hy's Steak House, the Keg 'n Cleaver and Old British Fish and Chips — which means that at least a half dozen fine eating places have been ignored. Other than that it's a readable, well-researched Canadian version of the Guide Michelin.

Chuck Davis' "Guide To Vancouver," put out by Jim Douglas' busy publishing house, is absolutely first rate, obviously a labor of love for the author who is better known for his broadcasting than his writing. There's a wonderfully humorous chapter on how to spend a weekend in Vancouver for under $20 (I once spent 10 minutes there on the same budget), but it's the best, most complete guide to that hateful place that I've yet seen.

Television

Our fat file on misleading advertising on the tube has a whimsical addition in that current commercial for Gruyere, the sharp-flavored cheese from Switzerland, in which the young, unblinking Swiss miss whips off the foil package with a single gesture. Since it takes, conservatively, a good 20 minutes to break your way into a regular package of Gruyere I fear there's a certain loss of authenticity.

Eating Out

Pierre has moved on, as these footloose Frenchmen will, but they've a new chef at Le Coq au Vin in Bastion Square and its still my favorite place to take an out-of-town visitor for lunch.

Rose Marie Baciu's fine little restaurant is reachable only by walking through the square, always one of the places in the city I love the best, and both the decor and the cuisine that awaits you ahead are just as pleasant.

The new chef is Rene Nicolai, a tall, 36-year-old native of Nice so recently arrived from the Riviera that his English is — how you say? — beautifully fractured. But Rene communicates with no difficulties whatever with a skillet.

The menu has been enlarged to embrace his own specialities, including a genuine bouillabaisse if you've a large party and give Rene a day or two warning, but the lunch-time feature is still the town's finest omelet and you may have your choice — mushroom, cheese, Provencale, asparagus, potato, tomato, shrimp, oyster, onion and many more, with a glass of wine, and get change back from a five-dollar bill for two.

The dish that gives the restaurant its name remains the house specialty at dinner with a fine table d'hote built around it. A dinner of proper onion soup, a small loaf of hot, crusty French bread, salade nicoise or coquille, coq au vin, pastry and coffee, with something from the cellar, is just about the finest meal in town and, surprisingly, one of the most reasonable.

Records

A "must" for any jazz buff is the new Columbia release called "Clifford Brown: The Beginning and the End," a memorable performance by one of the great trumpet men of all time. The title is an apt one since Brownie died in a car accident in 1956 at the age of 25. No one who hears the kind of improvisation, warmth and tone of his horn in this album can listen without a sense of loss.

Columbia says that only recently the tapes of Brownie's last recording session were discovered — the band was Chris Powell and His Blue Flames — and it must be true since no record company would deliberately keep from pressing a performance of this calibre.

Many considered him the heir apparent to Dizzy Gillespie and Gillespie has said that jazz was dealt a lethal blow by Clifford Brown's death. That is only too sadly apparent in this lyrical and high-spirited playing.

WHAT'S HALLOWEEN without a costume and it's more fun if it's a group project—for everyone that is except the "model." Michael Wilkey seems a bit doubtful on the outcome as his "classmates" at Jiminy Cricket kindergarten — from left they are Morgan Brayton, Malissa Gustus, Derk Little and teacher Mrs. Connie Champion—put finishing touches to his going-out attire. Shell Out That 'Treat' With Needy Child in Mind

A squadron of pint-sized hobgoblins and witches will cover the city this Halloween night with requests that householders shell out for United Nations Children's Fund.

Identified by an orange UNICEF collection box and a shy smile, the canvassers will explain the money collected goes to help long-term projects to aid children in developing countries of the world.

Also on the Halloween calendar are a wide variety of community bonfires:

—The Oak Bay Kiwanis Club party starts at 7 p.m. at Firemen's Park.

—Esquimalt Lions Club, starts at Kinsmen Gorge Park at 7 p.m.

—Prospect Lake Hall, on Sparton, will have a party starting at dusk.

—Starting at 6:30 p.m. will be the Colwood firemen's party at the gravel pit on Wishart, Langford firemen's party in Centennial Park behind Buffalo Hall at Carlow and the Metchosin party at the fire hall on Happy Valley Road.

—Sooke firemen's costume party starts at 7 p.m. at the fire hall on Sooke Road.

—Sidney recreation group's costume party at Sanscha Hall at 7 p.m.

—At 7:30 p.m. the View Royal firemen's party starts at Helmcken Centennial Park. The North Saanich party is also at 7:30 at the firehall at Wains and West Saanich Road.

—Central Saanich celebrations are scheduled at the Brentwood school and the Saanichton fairgrounds.

WORK FOR 200 ON REFIT JOB

About 200 extra workers will be hired by Yarrows Ltd. for the annual refit of the P and O Line's Arcadia.

The 720-foot luxury liner, with a gross tonnage of 30,000, is expected to arrive in Esquimalt at midnight Nov. 15.

After having some work done alongside, she will enter Esquimalt Graving Dock Nov. 21.

The refit is expected to take about two weeks.

A Yarrows spokesman said extra workers in all trades will be needed.

The Arcadia carries a complement of about 600. A party of 231 crew members will leave by bus for Vancouver on the first day. There they will board a chartered DC 8 to be flown back to England.

Replacements will be flown out before the Arcadia leaves.

We'll Remove Chips—Hydro

Wood chips used in a B.C. Hydro project in Langford will be removed as soon as the job is finished, the company promised Tuesday, but residents consider the promise worthless.

"By the time that job is finished, the whole area will be under two feet of water from the winter rains and those wood chips will be gone all right — right into the lake," a member of the Glen Lake Ratepayers' Association, Jim London, charged.

London and other residents say the wood chips, used by B.C. Hydro to construct an access road in the Jacklin Road area, will be carried by winter rain and spring runoffs into Lanford Lake, contaminating and perhaps destroying the marine life.

Residents want the wood chips taken out now, but a Hydro spokesman said the chips won't be removed until the job is finished, by the end of the year.

John Williams, president of the Glen Lake Ratepayers' Association, said today he has received a reply to his letter of protest to Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer saying he (Lorimer) has requested a report from B.C. Hydro on the wood chips situation.

Help Salmon To Spawn

The Amalgamated Conservation Society is looking for manpower and divers on Sunday to move spawning salmon up the Sooke River.

The operation calls for transfering fish blocked by a waterfall just above the potholes to above the canyon where they can proceed upstream to spawning beds.

Al Meadows, co-ordinator of the project, said men are needed to haul netted coho in the river and divers to see that the net does not catch on rocks.

The operation starts at 10 a.m.

Ney Loses Fight to Limit School Size

A $22 million five-year school construction plan was approved Tuesday despite the protests of trustee Dr. Philip Ney.

See also Page 27 for improvements planned at Lampson elementary school.

Ney tried unsuccessfully at a special meeting of the board to amend the plan so as to include restrictions on the size of secondary schools in coming years.

"Small schools are healthy. They're healthy for the development of a child's personality," said Ney, a psychiatrist.

His strongest objection came over a plan to add four classrooms in 1974 to Mount Douglas senior secondary.

"We add little by little until we get a monstrosity," he said. "At what point do we call a halt?"

Other board members said they supported the idea of limiting school sizes, but said the matter should be discussed at another meeting, not tied in with the five-year construction plan.

Ney moved a motion asking the Mt. Douglas addition be abandoned and a new high school be set up in the Gordon Head area in portable classrooms.

Chairman Peter Bunn ruled the motion out of order. Ney challenged the ruling of the chairman, and the rest of the board voted to uphold Bunn's decision.

Later in the meeting Ney moved an amendement to a motion approving the five-year plan that was similar to his earlier motion, and it was defeated.

"You may not like my persistence, but by George when I concern myself with kids, I'll persist," he said.

The over-all plan approved by the board, called the 1-3-5 program, includes a one-year top priority list of school construction, a three-year construction package to be submitted to referendum and a five-year long-range plan.

The provincial government has required every school district to submit its 1-3-5 program this year with cost estimates based on the first year, 1974, and not taking into account inflation.

Capital construction plans for year one, 1974, include:

—Building two new schools on school board property by Lambrick Park. One, a middle school for 500 Grade 5 to 8 students, will cost $1,297,000. The other, an elementary school for 300 students in relocatable buildings, will cost $605,000;

—Buying a site for another elementary school in north Gordon Head, for $137,000;

—Major reconstruction on Highrock junior secondary, for $884,000.

Included in plans for year two are:

—Major renovations to Victoria senior secondary $700,000) and George Jay elementary ($245,000);

—Addition of four classrooms, a library and activity room to Northridge elementary, for $345,000;

—Removal of a 1935 building at McKenzie elementary and addition of an activity room, for $252,000.

Plans for year three include:

—Expansion of the new Lambrick middle school to become a junior secondary ($1,450,000);

—Conversion of Mount View senior secondary into a junior secondary ($1,079,000);

—More renovations to Victoria senior secondary ($533,000);

—Purchase of a site for a new elementary school in Victoria West, for $100,000.

The board's 1-3-5 program estimates that $6.6 million will be spent in year four, and $3.3 million in year five.

Mulek Issued City Ultimatum To Clean Site

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Victoria city council Tuesday decided to issue an ultimatum to Vancouver developer G. F. Mulek: clean up the condition of your apartment site at View and Quadra or we'll do the work and bill you for it.

Tired of waiting for action to improve the appearance of what has been termed the biggest eyesore in town, council agreed in its caucus meeting the time has come to use its powers under the Municipal Act to force Mulek's cooperation.

Specifically, the city solicitor will be asked to draw up a formal notice for approval by council, directing the developer to:

—Hide all the reinforcing rods that now protrude from the building's exterior;

—Remove all forms still attached to the west face;

—Complete the ramp entrance from Quadra Street;

—Demolish the old buildings at the corner of Quadra and Fort;

—Erect a "good quality, high constriction" fence around the undeveloped portion of the site; and

—Remove all old forms and equipment.

Council was told a letter dated Oct. 22 from city engineer James Garnett to the firm, asking for this work to be done, has not been acknowledged.

At his weekly press conference today, Mayor Peter Pollen remarked the city had been "most fair" to Mulek in giving him ample opportunity to clean up the site, adding it was obvious the developer had no intention of co-operating.

City solicitor Jake de Villiers explained that if the developer fails to comply with the formal work order, the city would have the right to enter the propery, carry out the necessary work and charge the cost to Mulek on his property tax bill.

In that case, he said, the city's bill would have priority over Mulek's mortgage payments and other commitments.

The city has already billed Mulek $10,100 for repairs to damaged road surface and sidewalks, which it claims was caused by the development. To date it has not been paid.

Drug Meetings Next Week

The second government-sponsored conference on drug abuse and treatment of addicts will be held here all next week.

The conference, called by Human Resources Minister Norman Levi, will be closed to the public as was the first, held last May.

New Vote Rule Labelled 'Vendetta'

Provincial legislation that would remove land ownership as the basis for voting eligibility and eliminate all corporate voters from municipal voting lists was described Tuesday as "almost a vendetta against property owners and businesses."

Victoria Ald. Mike Young said during a freewheeling discussion of the legislation by city council's caucus it appears more than just electoral reform is involved in the provincial government's move.

The proposed amendments to the Municipal Act seem to be designed to "disenfranchise property owners once and for all," he said.

"It's actually frightening," chipped in Mayor Peter Pollen. "It's smacking almost of the development of class warfare. It's rather shocking. . . ."

Ald. Sam Bawlf said those who really stand to lose are not the big corporate interests but the small businessmen, whose base of influence is narrow enough already without having it whittled away by the denial of property voting rights.

Referring to another amendment to give tenants the right to vote on money bylaws, Ald. Bill Tindall noted "transient" voters would be able to affect the outcome of vital issues and "be gone the next day."

Young also came down heavily on another provision in the package of amendments — that would remove the specific term property owners from the designation of those who must be notified as persons potentially affected by public hearings on zoning changes.

The new requirement under the legislation would be merely that occupants of property in the area concerned be notified.

Victoria protested the inclusion of occupants when the act was amended earlier this year, and Young said the proposal now to leave that as the only category would create further problems rather than alleviating the present difficulties.

(The city claims it is near-impossible to keep track of a constantly moving residential population in any given area. Besides the physical problem of sending out hundreds of notifications, officials fear a public hearing could be ruled invalid if only one person claims he was not notified).

Said Young disgustedly: "The people we are required to send notices to now are those we don't have on our rolls."

Stressing the difficulty of keeping an accurate tally of residents, Bawlf said the North American norm is that each person moves every three years.

"I would suggest that Victoria, with its high proportion of rental accommodation, well exceeds that norm."

Bawlf said a rough estimate would be that of James Bay's population of about 9,000, "300 to 500 people would move in and out every six months."

To avoid confusion, and in expectation the provincial government would act soon to improve the situation, city council last week postponed indefinitely three public hearings that had been scheduled for December.

Aldermen agreed Tuesday the hopes had been dashed, and the hearings should continue to be deferred until the impasse is resolved.

Belly Dancers In Saanich?

Belly dancers at the Lakehill Women's Institute Hall?

It may have been the acoustics or the soft-spoken tones of the spokesman but there was some confusion Tuesday when Saanich council held a public hearing on zoning of the LWI property on Quadra to permit a parking lot.

The spokesman had been asked about the number of cars that could be expected to be parked during evening activities at the hall.

She mentioned there was a regular Saturday dance that drew about 100 people and the hall was also used for other events.

Eyebrows were raised slightly when one event appeared to be belly dancing.

"That's not belly dancing," said Ald. Bill Noel, helping out the spokesman, "It's ballet dancing!"

The council approved the zoning for the parking lot, which will hold 30 cars, providing six-foot screening is erected to protect homeowners in the area.

Cats Given Message —In Morris Code

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

Since the beginning of training camp six weeks ago, Ollie Dorohoy has been leading his light-hitting Victoria Cougars to the water, but few of them have been thirsty enough to take even a sip.

Rookie winger Peter Morris, however, took a healthy guzzle Tuesday night at Memorial Arena and as a result led Cougars to a 6-6 standoff with New Westminster Bruins in a Western Canada Junior Hockey League game before only 979 fans. The deadlock gave Cougars three of a possible four points against the Bruins, whom they beat 7-5 Saturday.

One of the Cats' more glaring shortcomings so far this season has been their reluctance to body check, but Morris spent Tuesday evening demonstrating the advantages of playing the man.

One of the smaller Cougars at 150 pounds, he threw his weight around to advantage, took part in a first-period scrap and was instrumental in a three-goal performance by linemate Derek Haas.

Morris was especially effective on Hass' second goal which put Cougars into a 2-0 lead. A bone-jarring check along the New Westminster boards gave him the puck, which he shovelled over to Hass for the score.

Cougars, however, dissipated their advantage and needed a slapshot goal from Tim Williams early in the third for the tie. It was the only goal of the period and the Cats managed to tighten up after that.

It was the second goal of the night for Williams, obtained two weeks ago in a swap of defencemen in which Cougars dealt Kim Clackson to Flin Flon Bombers.

Glen Ing was the other Victoria marksman while New Westminster scorers were Murray Beck with two, Ron Greschner, Don Hay, Brian Shmyr and Ken Dodd.

Cougars got a standout performance in goal from Danny Rogers, one of three Nanaimo Clippers who dressed for the game. The others were defencemen Gord Genereux, used sparingly, and Bruce Van Camp, who got a regular shift after Rick Williams pulled a shoulder muscle early in the second. All three returned to Nanaimo after the game.

Rogers faced 40 Bruins drives, all of them the fault of a porous Victoria defence. The 16-year-old Saanich minor hockey product repeatedly found himself eyeball-to-eyeball with Bruins who were left uncovered on his doorstep.

Bruins, who susprised Calgary Centennials with a 2-0 shutout Sunday night by physically intimidating them early in the game, tried the same tactics Tuesday with questionable success.

In addition to Morris' skirmish with Reg Duncombe, Cougars' Lorry Gloeckner scored a clear-cut tistic decision over Sid Prysunka.

There was some addded entertainment at the start of the second period when Bruins reverted to the age-old tactic of keeping the opposition waiting by ignoring two warning buzzers.

That move had Dorohoy hollering across the ice to all three game officials, who trooped into the New Westminster dressing room to dig Ernie McLean's kids out.

The tie left Cougars in fourth place, five points behind third-place New Westminster with five games in hand, and two points ahead of fifth-place Kamloops Chiefs, 9-4 losers Tuesday to Calgary.

In an Eastern Division game, Swift Current Broncos upset Regina Pats 6-4.

Cougars are idle until Saturday night when they play the last-place Edmonton Oil Kings in an 8:30 game at Memorial. Dorohoy hasn't yet decided on further lineup changes for that one.

HELP FOR GOALIE Ed Giacomin is provided during National Hockey League game Tuesday night in Vancouver as Andre Boudrias of Canucks attempts to get crack at rebound in front of New York goal. Giacomin keeps eye on puck while Ron Harris blocks Boudrias, who is also hampered by stick of Walt Tkaczuk (left). Rangers and Canucks battled to 3-3 deadlock. (CP Wirephoto)

Football: So Give The Lions an Edge

The funny thing is that B.C. Lions should be favored over Calgary Stampeders Saturday night at Empire Stadium.

Preposterous, you say. But true, nonetheless. The Lions, once downtrodden and despised, are on the threshhold of history. For them, getting into the playoffs is a major victory; this season perhaps more so.

But that's precisely the prize in Saturday's finale. Nothing more, nothing less and besides, suddenly the Lions are healthy again, wanted, and the darlings of the faithful. It has been said that 1,500 extra seats are being provided for Saturday's game where earlier they went begging.

A quick change? You bet. Because only a few short weeks ago, the Lions were dead, awaiting only the burial. Their prime backfield stars, fullback Johnny Musso and quarterback Don Moorhead, were hurting, and it was extremely doutful if they would be of much use in the final weeks.

That wasn't the end-all either. Many of the linemen were aptly referred to as "walking wounded," and no lineup was ever certain. Often castigated, sometimes rightfully so, was that last line of defence, the defensive backfield. It wasn't that highly regarded either.

Now, however, the Lions are two points away from a playoff berth against Edmonton or Saskatchewan, another placing that won't be decided until the very last meeting of the season between those two clubs. Simply told, an Edmonton victory would give Esks first place because of a better seasonal record against the Riders. Otherwise, natch, it will be Saskatchewan.

Of Fitness and Pride

So how close can a race get? In the East, it's the same story. Everything depends on the final games. Only Winnipeg is out, put in limbo by the Lions.

But to B.C. The highly perceptive note is that the club is reasonably fit once more. Moorhead is back, and throwing. He has recovered from his injured shoulder even though his ankle is sore. Musso, despite wearing one shoe about two sizes larger than the other because of sprained toes is running as well as anyone anywhere. Lou Harris has returned to the lineup, and he is welcome and dangerous; and Jim Young has been throwing some stiff, crack-back blocks when he isn't catching passes, at which he has few peers.

And it may not be generally known either but Young has been playing most of the season with a broken finger. As to the rest of the club, everything is as normal as can be, with probably a higher personal pride involved, just as it was in that heart-stopping finish against Winnipeg last Sunday.

The club came up "big" when it had to, for a change for sure, and it should be noted too that when Eric Guthrie called for a pass in that clutch situation late in the fourth quarter, he did it on his own. He checked off after calling a punt in the huddle.

Speaking of Records

That's when the Lions beat the rap. They didn't choke up as their season record indicated they might; and when Musso cracked over from the eight for the winning touchdown he was virtually untouched just as it is diagrammed in the playbook. Somehow, everything had clicked.

Now, it's another week, another game. Calgary the foe. In previous match-ups the Lions knocked off the Stamps 9-2 and then lost 13-12. That loss came when Moorhead was out with his shoulder injury.

On the other hand, before Calgary's win over Edmonton 11 days ago, the Eskimos had beaten the Cowboys eight straight times. That victory had to do a lot for the Stamps, unless it is measured in the terms that the Esks knew at the time the only game that really mattered to them in a battle for first place was this Sunday's game against Saskatchewan in Edmonton.

It should be recalled too that the Lions, when they went bad, went nine whole games without a win. But even then, presto! All was not lost. In that ninth game against Edmonton they got a tie, 14-14, in a game they should have won. Suddenly, they were working on a comeback.

Which is right now, and if they get by the Stamps, and the Riders win the West . . . well . . . didn't the Lions hand Edmonton a 30-11 thumping way back on Tuesday, Aug. 14?

But that may be next week's story.

Leafs Whip Wings; Canucks Earn Tie

By Canadian Press

If Detroit Red Wings were looking for pity, Maple Leaf Gardens was the wrong place to visit.

Toronto Maple Leafs showed no sympathy for the staggering Wings, shutting them out 7-0 Tuesday night while holding a 45-26 margin in shots.

And the slumping New York Rangers didn't do much better, getting a 3-3 tie with Vancouver Canucks to remain in sixth place in the National Hockey League.

In the other game, Los Angeles Kings sored two unanswered goals in the third period to nip St. Louis Blues 3-2.

The Wings, now with seven defeats and a tie after 10 games—good for last place in the East—showed little against the Leafs to enable goalie Ed Johnston to pick up his first shutout of the season.

Outscored 24-9 in their last four games the Detroit brass has been doing its best to deny reports of dissenion on the club and that general manager Ned Harkness is on the way out.

Owner Bruce Norris said Tuesday in a telephone interview from Florida that Harkness will remain in his position.

"I have complete confidence in Ned and in everyone else running the team," said Norris, who was attending the NHL governors and general managers meeting.

The Leafs, using six players they didn't have last year, scored five goals in the second period—two in 40 seconds—on their way to their fifth win in 10 starts.

Ron Ellis scored twice for the Leafs, his first and second of the year, and defenceman Jim McKenny contributed a goal and two assists. Rookie Ian Turnbull, formerly of Ottawa '67s in the Ontario Hockey Association Junior A series, opened scoring with his first goal of the year at the 14-second mark of the middle period.

Before the game, defenceman Gary Bergman said: "If we lose anybody it affects us a lot . . . both of our young goaltenders (Terry Richardson and Doug Grant are going to be good ones. But, being this young they make a difference—the team tends to be thinking of protecting them so much that we're afraid to be offensive enough."

Bergman proved the point just when the buzzer sounded to end the ifrst period. When Toronto defenceman Bob Neely scored a one-punch knockdown over Tom Mellor, Bergman was given a game misconduct for being the third man in the fight.

In Vancouver, Don Lever and Bobby Schmautz soored two goals in less than a minute early in the third period to give the Canucks the tie before 15,570 fans.

Rangers, one point behind the fifth-place Canucks, now have four defeats and a tie after five games. They led 3-1 on goals by Ted Irvine, Vic Hadfield and Gene Carr before the Canucks rallied.

Butch Goring's third goal of the season at 17:28 of the third period gave Los Angeles its third win in nine games. The Kings share third place with Chicago Black Hawks and Pittsburgh Penguins, all with eight points, and one behind second-place Atlanta Flames.

PURCHASE OF SEALS 'POSSIBLE'

HOMOSASSA SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — The board of directors of the National Hockey League says it will discuss buying Charles O. Finley's California Golden Seals during a week-long meeting.

The board had set up a committee to discuss such a purchase but the committee and Finley failed to agree on terms.

"The possibility of buying the Seals is on our agenda," said Don Ruck, NHL public relations director. "It has always been the league's position that we were interested and it appears that there has been a rekindling of interest."

Much of Tuesday's meeting was spent listening to committee reports on litigation with the rival World Hockey Association.

Bucks Pad String By Beating Kings

By The Canadian Press

Lucius Allen scored 26 points for Milwaukee Bucks Tuesday night as they posted their seventh straight National Basketball Association win, a 112-78 win over Kansas City-Omaha Kings.

In Tuesday's other NBA games, Buffalo Braves edged Seattle SuperSonics 105-103, Atlanta Hawks downed Phoenix Suns 122-101 and Portland Trail Blazers nudged Los Angeles Lakers 114-112.

San Antonio Spurs dropped New York Nets 104-92 and Memphis Tams defeated Carolina Cougars 110-99 in American Basketball Association action.

Milwaukee, the Midwest Division leaders, now has a 9-1 record for the season. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar added to their cause against the Kings with 22 points. John Block had 25 points for the Kings.

Randy Smith, who earlier missed three free throws in a row, sank two with one second to play to give the Braves their narrow victory, giving them a half-game lead in the Atlantic Division of the NBA.

Smith, Bob McAdoo and Ernie DiGregorio each had 21 points for the Braves. It was Buffalo's fourth win in a row—a club record.

Pete Maravich scored 31 points and Lou Hudson 20 to spark the Hawks to their fourth win in their last five games. Charlie Scott had 21 points for Phoenix.

The Trail Blazers overcame an 18-point third-period deficit to beat the Lakers. Geoff Petrie was their high scorer with 26 points. Gail Goodrich had 35 points for the Lakers.

The Obstacle Course

Here's something you can practise on your own. Agility and balance are improved by running on your skate tips.

Lay half a dozen sticks on the ice the way you see them in the illustration. Space them various distances apart so you have to adjust your rhythm between each stick. You'll have to step over each, of course, and the distances won't allow you to take a power stroke between any two. That way, you'll have to be on your toes the whole distance.

Look at the illustration again. You'll see the player's head is up and he's carrying the stick across his body to help maintain balance. It's a great exercise and harder than it looks.

Soviet Victory

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay (AP) — The Soviet Union won the world women's volleyball championship by defeating Japan 15-5, 15-9, 15-11.

South Korea finished third in the first world tournament, followed by Peru, Cuba, the United States, Canada, Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay.

Pacific Shares Tournament Lead

Pacific and Atlantic zones grabbed shares of the lead when the five-day Canadian Forces soccer championships got under way Tuesday at Colville Road Park.

Pacific, made up mainly of players from the host CFB Esquimalt base, got goals from Bob Laws and Peter Okopski to edge Quebec 2-1.

Atlantic surprised the defending-champion Europe squad, which is made up of players from Canadian Forces bases in West Germany, 3-1.

In Tuesday's other game, Ontario and Prairie zones battled to a scoreless draw.

The round-robin tournament continues with games at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. each day and ends Saturday.

Phoenix Suns Trade Hawkins

PHOENIX (AP) — Phoenix Suns Tuesday traded star forward Connie Hawkins to Los Angeles Lakers in exchange for forward Keith Erickson and a high 1974 National Basketball Association draft.

Erickson, who had been holding out in a contract dispute with the Lakers, is scheduled to report for the Suns' game tonight against the Detroit Pistons.

NEW DIRECTOR NAMED FOR CANADIAN SOCCER

TORONTO (CP) — Eckhard Krautzun of West Germany has been appointed director of coaching for the Canadian Soccer Association.

Krautzun, 32, is expected to take over as coach of Canada's national team, a post that has been held by Frank Pike of Toronto for the last three years.

Krautzun will accompany the team to Haiti next week when the team will play two exhibition games to help prepare Haiti for its World Cup zone final against Mexico.

As coaching director, Krautzun will be responsible for all aspects of the coaching program in Canada. His contract covers three years, leading to the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal. As host nation, Canada qualifies for the Games soccer competition.

Aussies Top Golf Series

SYDNEY (Reuter) — Australia won the women's international golf series here today, defeating Britain 7-5 in their final match.

Australia finished with three tournament points and New Zealand was second with 2½ Britain and Japan, which defeated Canada 9-3 today, shared third place with two points each. Canada finished fifth and last with half a point.

Canada defeated Japan 3-1 in team play but fell behind in singles matches later in the day.

Marilyn Palmer of Vancouver and Dale Shaw of Victoria combined to beat T. Kiyomoto and S. Yoshimochi one-up, while Barbara Turnbull of Saskatoon and Elizabeth Hoffman of Toronto tied with M. Yamada and M. Tachibana.

But then Yoshimochi beat Palmer by one hole, Yamada beat Turnbull three and two, Tachibana beat Hoffman five and four, and Kiyomoto beat Shaw four and three.

New Fisheries Proposals Might Help Sports Catch

Salmon fishermen, disgusted with the poor showing of coho this year, can take heart from proposals to improve the situation made by federal fisheries representatives at a recent meeting of the sport fishing advisory committee.

Included in the solution is a reduction or elimination of commercial fishing in inside waters.

Federal fisheries officials in attendance, including committee chairman Dick Crouter, were quoted in a report of the meeting sent to B.C. Wildlife Federation directors as saying the total sports catch was higher this year than in 1972 "but readily admitted neither one was satisfactory."

"They had no answers for the shortage," states the committee report.

Based on water conditions two years ago, federal fisheries predicted a good coho year in 1973.

We're still waiting.

Some proposals referred to at the meeting are already on the books and fisheries officials hope to implement most next year.

"One was to eliminate the large West Coast trollers from fishing inside waters," the report said.

Another was "their admitted realization finally of the value of the small feeder streams in production of coho and their stated plans to effect further protection for these streams."

Officials also said the net catch would have to be eliminated within the Strait of Georgia to improve the sports catch on Vancouver Island, particularly around Victoria, by some 65,000 fish.

Commercial netting in these waters has yielded in excess of 400,000 fish so far this season.

"They indicated their willingness to attempt this, but anticipated strong opposition from the commercial fish section."

★ ★ ★

Now is the time for sports fishermen to stand up individually and prod their elected representatives into supporting such "willingness."

Fisheries officials are also experimenting with a late release of coho smolts from hatcheries. Experiments and records in Washington State show this results in the salmon remaining resident in the general area of release.

Thus the coho would stay in the Strait of Georgia, not going out to sea, and provide more resident fish throughout the summer for sports fishermen.

Federal fisheries proposes a six-year study on the Strait of Georgia to "map and note the large-scale natural and unnatural changes taking place, to correlate the full recreational and industrial potential of the area and hopefully to recommend some specific proposals for maintaining and improving this area."

Established cost of the study is $25 million and fisheries is awaiting approval of the project from the federal treasury board.

Unfortunately, the board has asked the department to cut the costs in half.

Surely the federal government could cut costs elsewhere — like restraining some of the pilferage in the defence department or eliminating two of the three carbon-copy press releases sent to almost every newspaper in the country.

A report on the joint Canada-United States salmon-fishing negotiations was also tabled at the meeting.

"The basic end they are working towards at present is a proposed reduction in our offshore trolling fleet in exchange for an equal reduction in the U.S. net fishery of our Fraser River fish."

★ ★ ★

NIBBLES: While we're able to claim the world record coho — a 31-pounder taken in 1947 by Mrs. Lee Hallberg at Cowichan Bay — there are indications this could be topped by some of the large descendents of coho planted in the Great Lakes system . . . Richard Maraldo of Niagara Falls landed a 26½-pounder in the Sydenham River at Owen Sound, Ont., recently . . . It is probably an Ontario record.

Speaking of records . . . Don McLellan of Toronto eclipsed an Ontario mark by nine ounces with a 20-pound, three-ounce rainbow trout taken in the Nottawasage River.

Some quotable words from the Kootenay region's report in the monthly fish and wildlife branch bulletin:

"The fish and wildlife branch witnesses the progressive erosion of its resource base by many sectors of industry and development. If human populations continue to expand, man will experience progressive diharmony with his environment. If man seeks some state of balance among resources, quality of environment, quality of life and human numbers, the progressive increase of resource extraction and associated technology will have to be critically examined as to value.

"The resources in which we have special interest are sensitive indicators of the processes of expansion and change that sweep the land and affect everyone."

WHA Blades' Woes Unresolved

Times News Services

The World Hockey Association concluded its two-day meeting in Chicago Tuesday without resolving the financial plight of New York Golden Blades.

"The league is giving the Blades every opportunity to get themselves organized and the club is due to report back to the league next Monday or Tuesday," a league spokesman said.

The WHA recently had to underwrite the club's payroll when the owners of the Golden Blades were unable to pay the players.

"The league will continue to honor all players' contracts," said the spokesman "until the financial problems of the club are ironed out."

He added that no further significant action was taken Tuesday outside of "housekeeping within the league."

During Monday's session, Gary Davidson resigned as president of the WHA to concerntrate on his new project, the World Football League. A successor is to be named within two months.

In league action Tuesday night, Quebec Nordiques rallied with five goals in the second period for a 6-4 victory over Los Angeles Sharks, Houston Aeros whipped Minnesota Fighting Saints 6-1 and Chicago Cougars downed Winnipeg Jets 4-1.

The win was Quebec's third in a row and moved the club into sole possession of second place in the East Division, one point behind New England Whalers.

The Cougars' win—their first game at home after nine on the road—strengthened their hold on fourth place in the east with 11 points, one behind Cleveland Crusaders.

Edmonton Oilers lead the West Division with 12 points, three more than Houston, Winnipeg and Minnesota.

Four of Quebec's goals were scored by players who weren't with the club last season.

Jeannot Gilbert, with Hershey Bears of the American Hockey League last year, got his second and third goals; Serge Bernier, with Los Angeles Kings of the National Hockey League, scored his eighth; and Dale Hoganson, formerly with Montreal Canadiens of the NHL, fired his second.

Two goals by Joe Hardy—his third and fourth of the year — led Chicago to victory. Ron Snell spoiled goalie Cam Newton's shutout.

In Houston, the Aeros got four unanswered goals in the third period, two by Murray Hall, to beat the Fighting Saints.

Cutler West Choice As Best Canadian

MONTREAL (CP) — Three players from Montreal Alouettes and two from Edmonton Eskimos will be among the eight finalists vying for the annual Schenley awards given to the top professional football players in Canada, it was announced today.

Finalists were selected following second-round balloting by 96 football journalists and broadcasters in the nine Canadian Football League cities. The eight were selected from a list of 33 men included in the initial ballot.

The final decision on each of four categories — outstanding player, Canadian player-of-the-year, lineman-of-the-year, and top rookie — will be announced Nov. 22 in Toronto during Grey Cup week.

John Harvey, the Als' explosive running back who has rushed for 980 yards and two touchdowns on 128 carries, has been selected as the Eastern Football Conference candidate for the outstanding player award.

Edmonton's George McGowan, an exciting pass-catching split end, has been selected as the Western Football Conference's choice to oppose Harvey for the outstanding player prize.

McGowan is the top pass-catcher in the CFL this season. He has gained 1,113 yards on 80 receptions and has scored nine touchdowns.

Gerry Organ, Ottawa Rough Riders precision-like placement kicker, has been picked as the East's Canadian player-of-the-year. Organ has dominated the EFC scoring statistics for the last two years and has chalked up 123 points this season, including a record 31 field goals.

Organ's counterpart with the Eskimos, Dave Cutler, will be the WFC candidate for top Canadian-player prize. Cutler has 123 points, and has kicked 30 three-pointers.

In the lineman-of-the-year category, Ray Nettles, a 220-pound linebacker with British Columbia Lions, will represent the WFC, while Ed George of the Alouettes will oppose him. Both Nettles and George were selected as first-round nominees for the lineman category last year.

Montreal's Johnny Rodgers, last year's Heisman Trophy winner as the outstanding college football player in the United States while at the outstanding college football player in the United States while at the University of Nebraska, was selected as the EFC's finalist for rookie-of-the-year.

Rodgers is among the leading rushers in the EFC with 303 yards on 55 carries. He has caught 36 passes for another 722 yards and seven touchdowns.

Lorne Richardson, a defensive halfback with Saskatchewan Roughriders, will oppose Rodgers as the WFC's choice for top rookie honors.

The 190-pund Richardson, a native of Moose Jaw, Sask., played his college football at Colorado.

CITY SCHOOLS GAIN VOLLEYBALL BERTHS

Three Victoria schools—Vic High, Belmont and Reynolds — have qualified for the Vancouver Island high school girls' volleyball championships in Courtenay Nov. 10.

The city schools grabbed the three berths in a five-school Victoria playoff and the other five spots in the eight-school Island tournament will be decided this Friday at the North-Mid Island playoffs at Lake Cowichan.

The top two schools in the Island championships qualify for the B.C. playoffs in North Vancouver Nov. 22-24.

Hockey Leaders Battle to Draw

The Victoria High School Girls' Field Hockey League season certainly ended on a fitting note for both Oak Bay and Mt. Douglas teams Tuesday.

After running neck and neck throughout, the co-leaders fought to a scoreless draw in what was both their first meeting and final game and will have to share the Tully Shield as dual league champions.

Mount View crushed Esquimalt 10-0 in its final game to snap a tie with Norfolk House and move alone into third place. However, Norfolk House could get back into that tie again with a win Thursday over Reynolds in the only remaining league game.

In Tuesday's other games, Vic High blanked Parkland 2-0 and Belmont and Claremont played to a 2-2 tie.

The top six schools in the league go on to the Vancouver Island playoffs at Lansdowne Junior High School Nov. 9 and 10.

At the moment, that's Oak Bay, Mt. Doug, Mount View, Norfolk House, Victoria and St. Margarets. But Reynolds could edge St. Margarets out of the sixth berth with a win over Norfolk House Thursday.

Tom Seaver Belongs

NEW YORK (AP) — Tom Seaver once said he'd be happy to last five years in the majors. Today, he is the owner of his second Cy Young award as the National League's best pitcher.

"When I first started playing, I told my wife I'd be happy to get five years in the big leagues," the New York Mets' righthander said Tuesday after winning the award for the second time in seven seasons.

"Now I want to pitch until I'm 35," added the 28-year-old Seaver, who became the fourth pitcher in the 18-year history of the award to win it more than once and the first in either the National or American Leagues to win it without at least 20 victories for the baseball season.

TOM SEAVER
. . . second award

But Seaver, who posted a 19-10 record, and led the NL in strikeouts with 251 and in earned-run average, 2.08, won comfortably over reliever Mike Marshall of Montreal Expos and Ron Bryant of San Francisco Giants, the league's only 20-game winner.

In voting by a committee of the Baseball Writers' Association of America, comprised of two writers from each of the league's 12 cities, Seaver got 10 first-place votes and 70 points after being named on 21 ballots.

Marshall, who was 14-11 with 31 saves in 92 appearances, got nine first-place votes and 54 points in posting the best Cy Young showing ever for a relief pitcher. However, one reliever, Jim Konstanty of Philadelphia in 1951, did win a most valuable player award.

Bryant got three first-place votes and 50 points for his 24-12 performance. However, his ERA was 3.53 and he was the first National League 20-game winner to fail to record a shutout since Willie Sherdel of St. Louis in 1928.

Others receiving support were Jack Billingham of Cincinnati, who got the other two first-place votes and 30 points; Don Sutton of Los Angeles, seven points; Fred Norman of Cincinnati, three points, and Dave Giusti of Pittsburgh, one point.

"It means an awful lot to me because of the name that's on it and because it goes to one pitcher in the league—and that's it," said Seaver after joining Sandy Koufax of Los Angeles, 1963-65-66; Bob Gibson of St. Louis, 1968-70, and Denny McLain of Detroit, 1968-69, as multiple Cy Young winners.

"I really didn't think I'd win it," said Seaver, who also won in 1969 when he had a 25-7 record.

The American League winner will be named Nov. 7.

Weaver Gets Nod As Top Manager

NEW YORK (AP) — Earl Weaver, who remodelled Baltimore Orioles from a slow, slugging team into a fast, opportunistic club that recaptured the 1973 American League East Division pennant, was chosen today as AL manager of the year.

Weaver was a landslide winner in balloting conducted by The Associated Press before the playoffs and World Series. He earned 170 votes from sports writers and broadcasters in outpolling Jack McKeon of Kansas City Royals, who had 91 votes.

Dick Williams, who apparently has left Oakland Athletics after directing them to the American League and World Series championships, finished third with 41 votes.

Del Crandall of Milwaukee Brewers was fourth with 12 votes. Frank Quilici of Minnesota Twins, Ralph Houk, formerly of New York Yankees, Bobby Winkles of California Angels, Chuck Tanner of Chicago White Sox and Billy Martin, who piloted both Detroit and Texas, got one vote each.

Tanner was last year's winner.

This is the first manager of the year honor for Weaver, although he directed the Orioles to three straight pennants and more than 100 victories each year beginning in 1969. After that string, Baltimore slipped to third in the AL East in 1972, but bounced back for its fourth East title in five years this season.

First World 'Soccer Day'

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) — Spanish fans will see in action some — but not all — of the world's top soccer players when all-star selections of Europe and Latin America meet here Wednesday in the so-called "First World Soccer Day."

The match has been organized by the International Federation of Football Association (FIFA) with a charitable purpose.

If the match proves successful, FIFA will have a repeat every year in a different country.

Health Takeover Set for April

Services of the Greater Victoria metro health board will be taken over by the Capital regional board next April 1, Health Minister Dennis Cocke announced Tuesday.

The shift in administration comes after several years of sporadic negotiation, delayed by haggling over cost-sharing, and will likely set a pattern for the province.

It had been freely predicted for months and Cocke's announcement was greeted with satisfaction and a measure of relief the question is finally settled.

Ken Hill, chairman of the health board, said the announcement was "very gratifying" and a move the board had been endeavoring for years to accomplish.

It will mean the end to cost-sharing anomalies for public health services which have continually bedevilled the board, he said.

Under the complicated formula for financing its services, Victoria, Oak Bay and Esquimalt were paying the "lion's share" and Saanich and unorganized territories much less.

Director Edith Gunning, chairman of the regional board's health and social services committee, said Cocke had shown "a very reasonable approach" in negotiating terms of the transfer.

Cost sharing will be split 70-30, with the province paying the larger share as it traditionally has.

Gunning said the regional board in taking on political responsibility for public health services between Port Renfrew and the Gulf Islands will have a good deal of autonomy in determining regional needs and drawing the budget to meet them, although the provincial government will have to approve spending.

The agreement covering the transfer "allows enough flexibility in determining needs and budgeting to serve this particular region," she said.

Art Young, Chairman of the regional hospital board, said the transfer has been long-awaited and "everyone thinks it (public health administration) is now where it belongs."

Cocke said he is particularly pleased with the development "since it demonstrates the provincial government's announced policy for the de-centralization of health services."

Under the present administration some metro health board employees are on the payroll of the core municipalities but many others are employed by the province.

"When all are assembled under the regional district, they will suffer no hardship in terms of salaries, pensions and benefits," he said.

"This has been most carefully safeguarded by the terms of the agreement with the regional district."

Public health services, provided by about 140 staff and involved in the transfer, include public health nursing and inspection, baby clinics, home care, dental services, speech and hearing services for children.

Special health services include tuberculosis control, venereal disease control, laboratory services and rehabilitation and will continue to be available with the back-up support of the health department.

U.K. TORIES OUT TO WOO WOMEN

LONDON (CP) — Prime Minister Edward Heath set out Tuesday to win back disenchanted housewives to his Conservative party as the Queen, opening the last full parliamentary session before the next election, unveiled a government program calculated to appeal to women voters.

The tory leader, who must call a general election in the next 18 months, is well aware how his popularity has sagged with the women who were largely responsible for putting him in 10 Downing St. in 1970 on a price-cutting platform. Prices have risen inexorably and the family shopping basket reflects the increases week by week.

Accordingly, the speech from the throne, written by the government, proposed legislation to outlaw unfair sex discrimination; set up a revolutionary tax-credits system which will pay an allowance for each child directly to the mother; increase consumer protection; clean up Britain's pornography scene and cut down pollution.

The tax-credit plan will not begin operating for about five years, but more immediate legislation by the government will include an assault on the housing problem, increased protection for consumers in the booming credit market and major reforms of company law aimed at cleaning up what Heath has termed "the unacceptable face of capitalism."

Through the Queen, the government also announced its intention to bring in legislation outlawing job discrimination in sectarian Northern Ireland on the grounds of religion.

The overall tone of the speech, delivered in a clear, ringing voice in nine minutes, was domestic and seen as a runup to the election, though appropriate obeisances were made to Britain's foreign and Commonwealth allies and efforts to obtain "a just and lasting peace in the Middle East."

The chamber of the ornate House of Lords was a blaze of scarlet and white-furred robes as the peers and grey-wigged law lords played host to their Commons colleagues in the annual ceremony of summoning the MPs to hear the Gracious Speech.

AGNEW PAYS $10,000 FINE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former U.S. vice-president Spiro Agnew today paid the $10,000 fine imposed upon him after he pleaded no contest to a tax-evasion charge.

The justice department said it was notified by U.S. Attorney George Beall of Maryland that he received Agnew's personal certified cheque in the mail.

Agnew also was sentenced to three years of unsupervised probation after he entered the no-contest plea and resigned from office on Oct. 10.

Cabinet Trio Supports Plan

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

A pilot project for an integrated community education, health and social services program in James Bay has received the backing of three cabinet ministers.

Human Resources Minister Norman Levi has written the citizens group working to get the integrated program saying the children's committee of cabinet has approved it in principle.

As a first step, Levi has appointed Lorne de Girolamo, an active member of the James Bay Community Association, as community development worker in James Bay.

Levi, Education Minister Eileen Dailly and Health Minister Dennis Cocke make up the children's committee.

The group pushing for the integrated services program is the James Bay Neighborhood services Council, a 20-member offshoot of the community association.

The program is a joining of forces of two groups:

—The citizens' group, which has been trying to find government money to pay for community facilities at James Bay community school.

The group wanted the city of Victoria to build more gym space, activity rooms, extra library space and a cafeteria onto the school for community use, at a cost of $160,000.

City council last spring approved the idea in principle, but said it didn't have the money.

—The health and human resources departments, which want to set up combined health and social services centres around British Columbia.

In the summer, after being turned down by city council, the citizens' group turned for help to the government development group responsible for setting up health and social services centres in B.C.

The development group welcomed the citizens' plan and agreed they should work together.

"It's a whole new ball game for us," Connie Hawley of the development group said of the James Bay plan.

James Bay is the only place where her group is integrating education along with health and social services, she said.

James Bay's community school and the health-social services centre to be established will operate as one administrative unit, and operation of the whole thing will be overseen by a community council made up of citizens and staff members.

Whether or not the health-social services centre will be built onto the James Bay school at 140 Oswego hasn't been decided yet, said De Girolamo today.

It could as well be housed in another building, he said, because the important thing is that the services work closely together.

The three areas of services the Neighborhood Services Council wants to set up in James Bay are:

—Health services such as doctors, dentists, physiotherapists, psychiatrists, as well as baby clinic and pre and post natal services;

—Social services such as day care program, family counselling, all human resources department services, plus possibly legal aid, family planning and drug counselling;

—Educational services at the community school such as a community library, an information centre, a cafeteria and space for community activities.

Pauling Pushes Vitamins

PAULING
. . . remote health

Linus Pauling, the double Nobel prize winner for peace and chemistry, visited the legislature Tuesday and offered a solution to health problems in B.C.'s isolated communities.

The 72-year-old Stanford professor, whose list of honors and achievements seem never-ending, spent barely two hours in Victoria but was eager to use the time to speak of his much-publicized mega-vitamin theories.

He told reporters he had just returned from a conference on health care and communications in the Queen Charlotte Islands and recommended nutritional substitutes be used for preventative medicine.

For $25,000 a year, he said, the government could provide adequate amounts of vitamins C and E as well as other vitamins and minerals to cut the incidence of illness on the islands by more than 75 per cent.

The program would cost just more than one cent a day for the 7,000 Charlottes residents who are isolated from the advanced medical facilities available in B.C.'s larger communities.

Pauling recommended as well an educational program for isolated areas to teach people the enormous benefits of proper nutrition, specifically large doses of vitamins.

He told reporters he takes 6,000 milligrams of vitamin C a day and recommends other people take at least 1,000 milligrams to decrease the incidence and severity of virus diseases and possibly even cancer.

Pauling and his wife were introduced to the house by Premier Barrett who listed a few of the professor's accomplishments, including the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1954 and the Nobel Peace Prize in 1962.

Barrett was joined by opposition party spokesmen who lauded Pauling for his work in chemical bond theory and in opposing nuclear testing.

In 1958 Pauling organized a petition of 11,000 scientists who urged the United Nations to ban nuclear testing.

The white-haired scientist, who looks now like an energetic country doctor, said the latest voyage of Greenpeace III to protest French nuclear testing in the South Pacific was "a great thing" which he supported with a trip to New Zealand.

Report Will Spur Debate, Says Cocke

Health Minister Dennis Cocke said Tuesday the provincial government will make public the massive Foulkes report on health care in B.C., no matter what it says.

Speaking to a luncheon meeting of the Victoria Kiwanis Club, Cocke said he did not know what was in the report but it was bound to be a profitable one because it will generate vigorous public debate and that will also help give the government direction.

Dr. Richard Foulkes was hired by the province last year to review and make recommendations on all aspects of health care delivery in B.C.

His report is expected next week.

Cocke said the government is anxious to do more in the area of preventive medicine and will also emphasize rehabilitation and projects such as day surgery and home care to trim the number of days patients stay in hospital.

Day surgery programs, which deal in relatively minor operations, have patients going home the same day they have their surgery.

With home care, a variety of services are available to patients in their homes, enabling them to leave the hospital sooner.

Cocke said that an experimental home care program under way in Greater Victoria "is going to become a fact."

On providing emergency care throughout the province, which he noted has also been under study, he said it appears preferable to have smaller hospitals not provide it as long as there is adequate emergency transportation to the better-equipped larger centres.

There are now four hospitals, three in Vancouver and Royal Jubilee Hospital in Victoria, performing open heart surgery and this specialty is covered adequately, he said.

"We did get a little bit snowed" on the need for open heart surgery facilities. The government was told of long waiting lists but there was a good deal of duplication on the lists, he said.

Asked whether the government had considered developing a hospital insurance plan which would cover B.C. residents travelling elsewhere and taken ill, Cocke said it had been considered and the province has doubled (from $25 to $50 a day) what it will pay towards a resident's hospital bill outside Canada.

But the problem with such a plan is it would suffer from adverse selection, he said, that is, the people most likely to need it would buy and the younger and healthier people would take a chance. That could make such a plan very costly.

Disaster Petition

JUNEAU (AP) — Governor William Egan asked the federal government Tuesday to declare the Ketchikan Gateway borough a major disaster area.

Egan petitioned President Nixon as a crew continued to mop up debris from the weekend washout of Carlanna lake dam.

The governor said state and federal officials estimated the loss of public property at about $1.9 million. Nearly $320,000 in private property was believed destroyed.

Egan also asked for federal aid in arranging temporary housing and emergency loans for restoration of homes and businesses.

High winds and heavy rains caused the earth dam to burst Saturday, sending a flood of water, mud and logs down a steep hillside, collapsing a bridge and sweeping away cars and trailer homes.

No one was killed or injured.

Workers were expected to complete a temporary road late Tuesday allowing traffic to resume on the north Tongass highway.

One school and some 100 households still were without adequate drinking water.

Crews also were in the process of moving a 34,000-volt transmission line nearly toppled by the washout.

A CHANCE TO BUY YOUR OWN TOWN

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — For sale: One town. Price: $34,800. The town is Story, population 12, and it is listed officially on the Indiana map.

The town has been for sale for 10 weeks now and, judging from the response, Columbus realtor Carl McGuire believes there are plenty of people around who would like to own their own community.

However, with the high interest rates, it is easy to weed out those who are really serious, he says.

McGuire is selling the town, tucked away in the hills along Indiana 135, for Mrs. Morris Stutz of Columbus and her relatives.

McGuire says the town includes seven buildings, three along the highway. One is an old general store with all its contents. The town covers an area of 4.3 acres.

There have been plenty of inquiries about the village, McGuire said.

"Everybody loves it. But it is a hard thing for some of those people who show so much interest in it to find a use for it."

Nixon Now Admits Involvement In Antitrust Case Against ITT

WASHINGTON (WP) — President Nixon has acknowledged for the first time that he played a personal role in the controversial anti-trust case against International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. In doing so, he has contradicted sworn testimony by former attorney - general Richard Kleindienst.

Kleindienst testified at his confirmation hearing that no suggestions had come from the White House as to what action should be taken by the justice department.

"I was not interfered with by anybody at the White House," Kleindienst told the senate judiciary committee on March 8, 1972. "I was not importuned; I was not pressured; I was not directed."

Kleindienst was similarly emphatic when he was questioned about a possible White House role several weeks later, on April 27.

"I would have had a vivid recollection if someone at the White House had called me up and said, 'Look, Kleindienst, this is the way we are going to handle that case.' People who know me, I don't think would talk to me that way, but if anybody did it would be a very sharp impact on my mind because I believe I know how I would have responded.

"No such conversation occurred," Kleindienst swore.

The White House said Tuesday, however, that the president had directed Kleindienst not to press an apeal in which the supreme court would have ruled on the legality of conglomerate mergers — those in which a corporation acquires a firm that is in a different line of business and is therefore not a direct competitor.

The White House also said that it erred Monday night in saying the ITT acquisition in question was of the Canteen Corp. Rather, it was of the Grinnell Corp.

The Monday night White House statement as corrected was: "The president's direction to Mr. Kleindienst was based on his belief that the Grinnell case represented a policy of the justice department with which he strongly disagreed, namely, that bigness per se was unlawful. When the specific facts of the appeal were subsequently explained in greater detail, the president withdrew his objection and the appeal was prosecuted in exactly the form originally proposed."

The statement was inconsistent with a statement Nixon made, on another matter, at a press conference on Aug. 22. The statement was:

"The president does not pick up the phone and call the attorney - general every time something comes up on a matter; he depends on his counsel or whoever he has given the job to — or he has given that assignment to do the job."

At the same time, Kleindienst's sworn testimony does not square with a statement he gave recently to Archibald Cox, the former special Watergate prosecutor.

Kleindienst told Cox that the president phoned him in 1971 to order him not to press the Grinnell appeal, the New York Times disclosed Tuesday.

Ralph Nader's ITT specialist, Reuben Robertson, charged that the White House statement, is "irreconcilable" with the testimony Kleindienst gave under oath.

Robertson also said that the president had "an absolute obligation" to withdraw Kleindienst's nomination while it was pending last year and "bring him to justice," if Nixon knew that his nominee was giving inaccurate testimony.

TAX AUDIT SPURRED RETURN OF $100,000

WASHINGTON (WP) — President Nixon's close friend, Charles "Bebe" Rebozo returned to Howard Hughes $100,000 in unreported campaign contributions weeks after the Internal Revenue Service this spring began a tax investigation of Rebozo's handling of the money, according to informed sources.

The $100,000, which Rebozo received in cash from an emissary of billionaire Hughes in two $50,000 payments in 1969 and 1970, had been kept in a Florida safe deposit box for three years before it was returned to Hughes this June.

Kenneth Gemmill, a Philadelphia attorney who represented Rebozo at the time of the IRS investigation, recommended that Rebozo return the cash to Hughes to avoid "embarrassment" with the IRS, one source said.

An associate of Rebozo confirmed this week that the IRS had audited Rebozo, and he said that the IRS investigators concluded that Rebozo handled the $100,000 legally. IRS spokesmen refused to discuss the audit or its findings.

About the same time that Gemmill recommended that Rebozo return the $100,000, Gemmill was also one of two lawyers advising the president to make an independent audit of his real estate transactions in California and Florida. The audit was performed by Coopers and Lybrand, one of the country's largest accounting firms, and released publicly this August.

White House officials said this week that Gemmill was representing Rebozo and not the president in recommending that the $100,000 be returned.

Gemmill could not be reached for comment because he is on vacation in Australia.

President Nixon said in his televised press conference last Friday that Rebozo had kept the $100,000 for so long because, while he was waiting for Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign treasurer to be named, the Hughes organization "had an internal fight of massive proportions."

Rebozo, according to Nixon, then decided to return the money to Hughes because Rebozo "felt that such a contribution to the campaign might prove to be embarrassing."

Nixon called Rebozo "a totally honest man" and praised him for exercising "very good judgment in doing what he did."

FUGATE

SHE WAS IN FOR LIFE BUT NOW MAY BE FREED

LINCOLN, Neb. (UPI) — Caril Ann Fugate, convicted as the accomplice of Charles Starkweather in a 1958 killing spree that left 11 persons dead in Nebraska and Wyoming, Tuesday won commutation of her life sentence though relatives of some of the victims objected.

The Nebraska pardon board reduced her sentence to 30 to 50 years, making her eligible for parole in 1976.

The board may have been influenced by reports that Miss Fugate participated in prison rehabilitation programs, completing her high school education and serving in the nursery of a York, Neb., church on Sundays.

Many of the church's parishioners earlier this summer urged the board to act favorably on her behalf.

Miss Fugate was imprisoned when she was 15 after Starkweather testified she was his "willing accomplice" in the slayings. He died in Nebraska's electric chair in 1959.

Evans Faces Trim Over Tax Vote

OLYMPIA, Wash. — Governor Dan Evans said Tuesday if Washington voters approve a state income tax, he will shave off his now-famous beard in celebration.

The governor said if the tax legislation passes next Tuesday, he will shave the dappled grey beard at the busy street corner of 4th and Pike in downtown Seattle.

Evans said growing the beard, started on a holiday in the San Juan Islands this summer, has been "a very interesting experience." It has drawn national press attention. "I am amazed and frankly kind of delighted at how much change people think it makes in everything else you do — just the fact that you wear a beard," he said. "I don't think it changes anything other than appearances."

CHICAGO — Publishers-Hall Syndicate announced Tuesday that the wife and son of the late Walt Kelly will carry on with the comic strip Pogo.

A spokesman for the company said Kelly put together a creative team of his wife, Selvy, an artist, and his son, Steven, a writer, during his last illness. The spokesman said the strip will continue uninterrupted and the new Pogo will make his appearance about Christmas time.

PASCAGOULA, Miss. — A lie detector test indicated Tuesday that a shipyard worker was telling the truth about being taken aboard a UFO by three crab-clawed creatures from outer space.

Charles Hickson, 42, was given the test by Scott Glasgow, a polygraph specialist from New Orleans, and repeated the harrowing tale he and a co-worker told authorities earlier this month.

"It is my opinion that he told the truth when he stated that he believes he saw a spaceship, that he was taken into the spaceship, and that he saw three creatures," Glasgow said.

LA PAZ (Reuter) — Klaus Altmann, naturalized Bolivian businessman sought in France for war crimes under the name of Klaus Barbie, was released Monday after nearly eight months in a Bolivian jail.

Altmann had been held since March because of extradition requests by the French and Peruvian governments.

The Bolivian supreme court last Wednesday finally turned down a Peruvian request for Altmann's extradition.

GAINESVILLE, Ga. — Paul Newman, the actor, wrecked his car Monday while practising for the Champion spark-plug road racing classic, but he was unhurt.

Newman slammed his Datsun 510 into a dirt bank after losing control coming out of a turn. His car, although extensively damaged, was expected to be ready to run in the race Sunday.

YORK, England — It was tempting and Allan Denney did not resist. He pinched the girl walking in front of him.

Lampson Parents Win

Efforts of parents of Lampson elementary pupils to gain special recognition of the lack of facilities at the school were rewarded Tuesday.

Greater Victoria school board agreed to ask that improving Lampson be made a priority project when it submits its five-year school construction program to the provincial government for approval.

The $22 million capital construction forecast was approved by the board at a special meeting Tuesday.

Lampson elementary parents presented a long brief on the needs of the school.

"Other than Highrock, where a student is known to have fallen through a rotting floor, we believe Lampson is the one school in the district most deserving of renovation at this time," said the brief.

Parents asked that in the first year of the construction program (1974) $300,775 be spent.

They want a gymnasium and administration area, a new library, and improved electrical facilities, washrooms and fire safety.

A letter to the school district from Esquimalt fire chief Earl Sarsiat "strongly recommended" the building be updated for public safety reasons.

The board agreed improvements to Lampson should come in 1974, but the $4 million the provincial government has allowed it to spend in that year had already been allocated to other schools.

So the board agreed to ask the provincial government to consider Lampson as a special project, so that $425,000 can be spent on an activity room, major renovations and removal of an old four-room annex.

Trustee Daphne Temple said the needs of Lampson have been passed over for years because it was believed the school would eventually be phased out.

A MILLION'S a big number, as students at a school in Pennsylvania are learning. George Murphy found that the bottle caps collected by fellow students to illustrate how many are in a million made a pile up to his neck—and they have gathered only 400,000 so far.

Cowichan Issues Aired

DUNCAN — A meeting featuring discussions on problems in the Cowichan Valley will be held at the Duncan elementary school gymnasium Thursday at 8 p.m.

Sponsored by the Duncan-Cowichan Chamber of Commerce, the meeting is the first of a series to look into the possibility of improving services in the Cowichan Valley Regional District.

Discussions will be held on amalgamation of communities, consolidation of certain services, and establishment of a water board.

Speakers at Thursday's meeting will include Don Duncan, engineer, Phyllis Whittome, chairman of the Cowichan District Hospital Board, who will speak on emergency and protection services, and Norman Joe, Cowichan band manager, who will speak for the Cowichan Indians.

North Cowichan Ald. Dennis Hogan, Duncan Ald. Martin Lukaitis, Pat Mullins, past Chamber of Commerce president, will speak on finance and taxation in North Cowichan, Duncan, and the regional district.

RECEIVER NAMED FOR SLEGG BROS.

Vancouver accountant Gordon Ovens has been appointed receiver and manager of Slegg Bros. Lumber Ltd. of Victoria to find ways of paying the company's creditors.

He is to report to the provincial Supreme Court by mid-December on whether the company should be sold or whether some other means can be found to raise funds.

Ovens said the problem arises from losses in the company's subsidiary, Slegg Forest Products, a Duncan sawmill. The firm is trying to sell the sawmill but has been unable to negotiate what it considers a fair price.

Municipal appraisal for land and building is $1.8 million but the company is reported to be seeking more than that.

"If the company could sell the sawmill at a good price it would solve the problem," Ovens said.

Meanwhile, he is operating the company and paying debts incurred since Oct. 15. Debts from before that date are frozen until the court makes an order in mid-December on how they are to be paid.

Directly affected are two lumber retail stores, one on Quadra Street and the other in Sidney. About 30 people are employed in the firms affected.

Slegg Acceptance Corporation Ltd., a Slegg subsidiary, is indirectly affected as well. Debenture holders are being advised to wait until mid-December before seeking any payments that might become overdue. Slegg Bros. Lumber owns about 50 per cent of Slegg Acceptance.

Bitterman Plans Rejection Appeal

Real estate operator Henry Bitterman, whose nomination papers for a city aldermanic seat were rejected Monday, said this morning he would appeal the decision before the 5 p.m. deadline expired today.

Bitterman said his solicitor was attempting to arrange a hearing before a provincial court judge some time this afternoon.

Victoria returning officer Morran Waller declined to accept Bitterman's nomination on grounds his firm was engaged in litigation with the city over a property matter. Waller said the Municipal Act bars candidacy in such cases.

Bitterman denies any litigation is in progress.

Meanwhile, another Victoria contestant, businessman Bob Ellis, said today he has taken legal advice and satisfied himself as to the validity of his own candidacy.

He was referring to doubts voiced by incumbent Ald. Malcolm Anderson, who said earlier it appeared Ellis was ineligible on grounds that his firm was attempting to enter a land-use contract with the city for a townhouse project.

Ellis said he doesn't believe any conflict is involved, either legally or in any other way. The contract in this instance, he said, amounts to a working agreement rather than any undertaking to provide equipment or services to the city.

"As for the legitimacy of my candidacy, I feel I am more qualified than someone who doesn't even live in the city," he added.

Teachers' Head To Quit Post

Bob Mitchell, president of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association, has announced he is resigning as president effective Dec. 31.

The demands of his job as assistant to the principal at Highrock Junior Secondary School in Esquimalt don't leave him with enough time to be GVTA president, Mitchell said today.

"I do believe we need a full-time president at the GVTA," he said.

He said the GVTA executive committee will likely recommend next month that the new president be appointed full-time.

"We really haven't kept up with the times," said Mitchell. Other teachers' association the same size as the Victoria one and others quite a bit smaller have full-time presidents.

The association has been asked more and more to participate in decisions of the school district, which is time-consuming, he said.

Mitchell's two-year term was due to end in June.

Libando Elected

Mike Libando has been elected president of the Cowichan-Malahat Liberation Association.

Others elected were Danny Clements, vice-president and Sherriden Clements, interim secretary.

MEET JAMIESON

As a rail straightener for the CPR, John Kenneth Jamieson used to dream of having a steady job and $10,000. Today, Jamieson, a native of Medicine Hat, Alberta, is the head of Exxon, the world's largest energy corporation. In Weekend Magazine this Saturday, Jamieson talks to writer George Russell about his decision to relinquish his Canadian citizenship, and other matters of special interest to Canadians including the growing concern over American control of our natural resources.

Flying Fathers — Andy O'Brien writes about the zaniest, most religious hockey team in the country and their special attraction. Liz Primeau takes a look at the paintings of Canadian artist Alex Colville whose work evokes the mystery of reality. Margo Oliver presents great recipes for Individual Fruit Puddings and Old South Fruit Ring. There's also an excerpt from the book Geniesh, An Indian Girlhood, in which Jane Willis describes her first day at a white-run boarding school at Fort George, Quebec. Saturday in Weekend Magazine.

Energy crisis puts stove works on back burner

STOVE FIRM'S NEWS GOES SOUR

EVERETT, Wash. (AP) — A shortage of electricity may mean a scarcity of pot-bellied stoves and fireplaces in the Everett area this winter.

For a while, the energy shortage appeared to spell good news for the Washington Stove Works of Everett. It turns out there was bad news as well.

The company spent about $250,000 on a new electric furnace to melt metal for its line of cast iron wood-and coal-burning stoves and ranges, in demand for cabins and second homes and by homeowners worried about power shortages in the dry Pacific Northwest.

Dean Bostwick, general manager of the firm, said he received a letter from the local public utility outlining mandatory electricity curtailment plans for the winter.

"No power, no stoves, and I have to lay off some employees," said Bostwick.

U.S. Forces Help Smuggle Refugees

BERLIN (UPI) — The two U.S. soldiers loaded the precious cargo into the secret compartment of their car and sped through the streets of Communist East Berlin.

The soldiers slipped past the watchful eyes of East German secret police and pulled into the Freidrich Strasse crossing point. The guards waved them through without a check and the car passed into the West.

Another group of German refugees had escaped.

The story, reminiscent of an intricate James Bond thriller, unfolded Tuesday in an East Berlin court.

The testimony was given by Hans Dieter Voss, a West German welder, who was charged along with another West German and a West Berliner of working for a professional escape organization.

Voss told the court the U.S. soldiers used a specially designed car with a hidden compartment to get the refugees out. He said they smuggled about 20 East Germans to the West and were paid $1,670 for each.

He said the group charged as much as $30,000 for passage to West Berlin.

Voss said Americans were used in the escape operation because unlike West Germans and West Berliners they are not checked by border guards at crossing points when travelling between East and West Berlin.

He identified the soldiers as Edward Sommerville and Mervin Smith, but gave no hometown addresses.

West Berlin officials said about 120 West Berliners and West Germans have been arrested on charges of helping refugees escape since the big four agreement designed to lessen tensions in Berlin went into effect on June 4, 1972.

The East Germans have said repeatedly escapes along transit routes between West Berlin and West Germany endanger the big four agreement, which provides for unhindered access to West Berlin.

Regional Airlines 'Squeezed'

EDMONTON (CP) — The president of Pacific Western Airlines, Donald Watson, said Tuesday the federal government is "pretty substantially" Air Canada-orientated" and regional airlines often are squeezed out of competition for air routes.

"It's difficult some days to know who makes the policy in Canada, (transport minister) Jean Marchand or Mr. Pratte (Yves Pratte, chairman of Air Canada)," Watson told a group of local businessmen.

"Air Canada would very much like to see the regionals wither up, but this won't happen notwithstanding having on hand tied behind our backs," said the president of Canada's third-largest airline.

Under federal policy, regional air carriers are permitted to compete with Air Canada on certain parts of mainline routes and may also develop specialized services.

However, when Pacific Western applied for an Edmonton to Calgary airbus, via Kelowna, the application was denied after a 15-month wait "on the grounds that it would constitute undue competition with the trans-continental carriers, he said.

"It is interesting to note that during this interval, Air Canada introduced the two services we had proposed. Services that we suggest are clearly regional in nature, as they fly between two points in our area of operation . . ."

Watson said the government's decision on the air route has been appealed.

"I fear, however, that with the present mood of Air Canada, should our appeal succeed . . . we would be squashed like a beetle under one's foot by a tactic Air Canada has knowingly or unintentionally used on other Canadian carriers in the past.

"The procedure here is to put a flight on about 30 minutes before and 30 minutes after your competitor . . ." a practice which is "almost always a reckless use of the shareholders' money."

Phosphates Making Washing Comeback

TORONTO (CP) — There's a swing back to the use of phosphates in detergents despite the protests of environmentalists, says W. Robert Cale, new president of the Canadian Manufacturers of Chemical Specialties Association.

"Because of the hazards of alternatives, many experts now recommend the use of phosphates," the executive of Erco Industries Ltd. of Toronto, a major phosphates producer, said in an interview.

He argued that government bans on detergent phosphates are ineffective because detergents account for only 30 per cent of phosphates found in typical sewage.

"So they still have to treat for phosphates in the sewage treatment plants, and it wouldn't cost any more to handle more phosphates than now exist."

Since January, the federal government has restricted phosphate content in detergents to five per cent. The average permitted level in the United States is about 20 per cent.

CITES SHORTAGE

The "settling down" of the phosphate debate has created a new problem—a shortage of elemental phosphorus.

"This has been precipitated by uncertainty in the industry throughout North America about government policies on the role of phosphates in detergents," Mr. Cale says. "Nobody has been investing."

His company raised the price of elemental phosphorus to 28 cents a pound from 25. The price of sodium tripolyphosphate, the common detergent component, has risen to $12.25 a hundredweight from $10.75—an increase of 14 per cent.

Mr. Cale says these price increases and the impending shortage of phosphates are echoed in the petrochemicals that are the other major components in detergents and the result will be further price increases at the retail level.

"I don't think the consumer has suffered yet, but anything based on petrochemicals is developing a higher cost base."

SUBMARINE OIL SEARCH UNDER STUDY

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian technology for the Arctic should get a boost this week as the federal energy department considers proposals for underwater seismic exploration for oil and gas.

Canadian - owned companies are bidding for a $200,000 contract to provide the department with data to be gathered in submersibles, some of which would be manned.

Seismic exploration using the small submarines under ice has never been done before, G. D. Hodgson, co-ordinator of the project, said Tuesday in an interview.

Readings taken through thick Arctic ice are distorted. They can be deciphered by computers, but only at considerable expense, said Mr. Hodgson.

Surface vessels can be used only for about two months in summer.

Nov. 12 No Holiday

EDMONTON (CP) — Remembrance Day in Alberta will be observed Nov. 11 despite the fact that it falls on a Sunday this year, Labor Minister Bert Hohol said Tuesday.

Hohol said the provincial cabinet decided against proclaiming Monday, Nov. 12, a holiday because it would have created, in effect, two holidays in a row.

As a result, workers with a clause in their contracts saying they will receive another day off work when Remembrance Day falls on a Sunday will take the holiday Monday.

But where there is no such clause or contract, it will be up to employers to decide whether the Monday following Remembrance Day will be a day off, said Hohol.

Four major school boards in Edmonton and Calgary will conduct classes Nov. 12 but provincial civil servants will get the day off because of a clause in their wage agreement, he added.

Court System Studied

EDMONTON (CP) — A task force has been established to encourage Alberta's treaty Indians to present submissions to a commission investigating the administration of justice in the province's lower courts.

Six fieldworkers currently are visiting Indian reserves and providing information about the commission headed by Mr. Justice W. J. C. Kirby of the Alberta Supreme Court, Doug Bouey, counsel for the Alberta Indian Association, said Tuesday.

The fieldworkers are asking natives what changes they would like to see in the lower court system and are arranging with band councils for the preparation of briefs.

Light Order Quashed

EDMONTON (CP) — Mr. Justice S. S. Lieberman of the Alberta Supreme Court Tuesday quashed an order which required the owners of nine older high-rise apartment buildings to install emergency lighting systems for fire escape stairwells.

He said Fire Commissioner Austin Bridges, who issued the order, did not have jurisdiction to do so.

All the buildings were constructed before 1969, when no supplemental power source for stairwell lights was required. They were approved by fire authorities at the time of construction.

House Adjourns

EDMONTON (CP) — Lieutenant - Governor Grant MacEwan gave royal assent to 30 bills Tuesday night as the 17th Alberta legislature was adjourned to Dec. 3.

Routine third reading was given to 25 government bills and legislative technicalities were invoked to speed passage of four other through second and third reading in the same sitting.

Adjournment was achieved, with co-operation of the opposition, to pave the way for debate starting Dec. 3 on provincial energy policies.

BABY IMPORT DENIED

TORONTO (CP) — No babies have been shipped to Ontario from Alberta for adoption "in the past years," Rene Brunelle, Ontario minister of community and social services, said Tuesday.

He was replying in an interview to a statement Monday by Bob Clarke, leader of the Social Credit opposition in Alberta, that more than 50 babies had been transported to Ontario from Alberta.

Brunelle said he was surprised at the statement.

"I have no idea where Mr. Clarke got his figures."

Alberta Health Minister Neil Crawford said in Edmonton Tuesday that only 12 of the 661 children up for adoption in Alberta this year were placed outside the province — one to Ontario.

The infant that came to Ontario did so because the mother wanted the chid to go to a Jewish home and attempts to place the child in Alberta failed.

Fake Meats Moving Into Home

By JOHN DRAKE

ROME (FWF) — An increasing number of diners in snack bars, hospitals and schools are today eating portions of "hamburger" and "turkey breast" that are no nearer meat than a field of soya beans.

What is more, these imitation meats, constructed from what is known in the industry as "textured vegetable protein", are now moving off the home, formerly sold in institutional packs of 15 or 25 pounds and upwards, they are now appearing in grocers in family-size packages. Their growing success is partly due to the skill with which their makers can imitate the real thing but the rising cost of meat is also helping them.

Representatives of more than 50 countries attending a conference on the world meat trade at the Headquarters of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), in Rome, have recently been discussing meat-like products and they concluded that over the next few years their production and consumption would be limited to high-income countries where recent high prices for meat were likely to stimulate their consumption. However, delegates agreed that even if only a small share of the meat consumed in these countries was displaced by meat-like products it would have significant consequences on international trade in manufacturing meat, the meat of lower quality normally processed before sale. The representative of Uruguay urged that national and international food standards protect the meat trade by making it compulsory to note on labels and wrappings the types of proteins used in meat-like products and to specify the type of meat used when meat was included.

The delegates requested the FOA secretariat to keep a continuous watch on developments in the meat-like products industry with special attention to product definitions, consumer acceptance, nutritional problems and government regulations covering them.

In a report prepared for the meeting it was predicted that output of meat-like products would increase many times in the next few years. And, said the paper, where vegetable proteins, particularly soya products, now provide the bulk of meat substitutes, the long-term outlook is for more protein production from the cultivation of yeasts, fungi and bacteria on such products as paper pulp and hydrocarbon residues from the oil refining industry.

The report noted that the meat-like products fall into two major classes: meat extenders used simply to make meat go further and the meat analogues intended to substitute directly for natural meat.

The meat extenders are largely produced as flours and grits, although there has recently been an increase in production of textured extenders. The extenders are used extensively in chopped and minced meat products such as frankfurter, meat loaf, meat balls and patties, chile con carne, luncheon meat and pet foods.

On Guard to Save Lives

By MAX LOW
Times Staff

It all began almost 900 years ago when the Brothers of St. John of Jerusalem got tired of killing and decided to concentrate on saving lives instead.

Before that, the brothers had been strangely divided. The knights in shining armor spent part of their time fighting off attacks from the eastern hordes, and the rest attending Christians in the hospital in Jerusalem.

Finally, in 1099, they tired of bloodshed and turned entirely to charity, forming themselves into a monastic brotherhood.

This marked the beginning of the Order of St. John, an order which grew and carried its life-saving and first-aid work to all four corners of the world.

The Order has three foundations: the St. John Ambulance Association (the Order's teaching arm), the St. John Ambulance Brigade (the uniformed men and women first-aid workers) and the Opthalmic Hospital in Jerusalem.

This hospital, which treats 63,000 eye-disease cases a year and caters to all races and religions, receives no Community Chest-type appeal funds but exists on voluntary subscriptions from around the world.

But the Association and the Brigade rely heavily on their share of the annual United Way funds.

This year, St. John Ambulance receives $12,223 from the United Way appeal. That's 45 per cent of the organization's annual budget of $26,000 and it's 10 per cent down on what it got last year.

The other 55 per cent of the budget comes from fees for class instruction in first aid, child care and home nursing, a small share of a provincial government grant, rentals of equipment to bodies such as police and fire departments, and from straight donations.

In Victoria, as in cities all round the world, the St. John Ambulance is essentially a "charity" organization. It exists primarily on donations, yes, but more than that. The members are 99 per cent volunteers and all its work is of a "charity" nature—it's given free.

Volunteers in the Victoria branch logged 3,377 man hours on duty last year at the request of the public, attending walkathons, highland games, soccer matches, school sports, cross-country runs, and things like parades.

Most of the time it's just a matter of being there—in case. But at parades there are always cases of fatigue and fainting, at bicycle races there are spills and cuts and at this year's Saanichton Fair there were 260 cases of bee stings to treat.

Operating from their low-cost ambulance, which is really a mobile first-aid post, St. John volunteers manned the huge lineup of cars backed up at Swartz Bay during last summer's B.C. ferry strike and administered first-aid and soup to the occupants.

"We got a lot of nice comments," veteran St. John Ambulance man Edward Thomas said Tuesday. "Particularly from Americans, as they don't seem to get too much voluntary work down there."

Thomas, a retired contractor, is the senior volunteer brigade officer for Vancouver Island.

Jim Tyre, an ex-navy man who has been in Victoria four years, is, as secretary-treasurer, the only full-time paid employee and the man who runs the St. John building at 941 Pandora Street.

Together they provided Tuesday a rundown on the makeup of the organization here and touched on a problem.

Altogether, counting women nursing; members, men ambulance members and Crusaders (boys and girls 15 and up) there are about 80 volunteers.

As well, there are boy and girl cadets between the ages of 10 and 15 and several auxiliary groups, including a retired group of ex-members who still meet and keep in touch with what is going on.

There is a women's volunteer group which helps to feed patients at the Royal Jubilee Hospital; and another group of volunteers which visit the Blind Institute and takes its turn manning the Red Cross blood clinic; and a "casualty simulation" group which helps people learn what to do at accidents; and a group under Thomas which puts its "save-a-life" program across to schools and other bodies.

"We would like to see more people, church groups, neighborhood groups and all the schools, take advantage of this course," Thomas said of the save-a-life program. "It's easy to learn artificial respiration and so very vital," he added.

The problem, said Tyre, is "a dire need for more members."

"Our public duties are free and we are being called on more and more now," said Tyre. "Members are pretty thinly spread around and we just can't meet all the requests we get."

Tyre said St. John Ambulance could do with at least 15 more men volunteers and about 30 more women.

The Victoria area, one of only two permanent branches in B.C.—the other is Vancouver—is a big one, stretching from Jordan River to Sidney (including Salt Spring Island) and up to the top of the Malahat.

A wide territory, lots of demands, and a shortage of volunteers has meant a lot of work for those who belong to St. John in Victoria.

And more than anyone this work has fallen on the shoulders of Thomas, long ago dubbed "Mr. St. John."

Thomas, who has worked with St. John Ambulance here for 35 years, handles the classes and there were 1,037 students last year alone.

Just as it was 900 years ago, the highest rank it St. John's is a knight. Oh, there are plenty of honorary knights, those on whom the distinction has been bestowed.

He may not ride a horse and he may not wear armor, but there is a lone worker who has risen through the Brigade—the only one in Western Canada to do it—and become a knight.

And that man is Edward Thomas of Victoria.

Will Grandma Join the Dodo?

Is the traditional grandmother disappearing? Will she soon become as extinct as the Dodo?

These questions surfaced the other morning at a small gathering of women who read, think, explore and try to find satisfactory answers to perplexing modern day problems.

In the lively debate that followed it soon became evident that everyone present agreed the answer was "yes" to both questions.

A new grandmother image has appeared in the past 20 years. A young grandmother who herself is at work while her own children are having their babies and facing their crises.

"She doesn't exist as the family safety pin any more," one in the group said.

Another added, with a forceful shake of her head "and when she herself is too old or ill to work her long-married daughters will be out at work and unable to care for her without help."

This catapulted the group into talking about responsibility in "things to come" for women.

Ideas came quick and fast. The discussion worked its way through the fact that with traditional divisions between men's work and women's work in employment rapidly being broken down by technology and automation, the same process will (and is) happening in the home.

That the changing role of man in the home is basic to any intelligent discussion about tomorrow's woman.

That we have created many problems for this generation because we have "loaded wage-earning work on to traditional domesticity without rationalizing the domesticity."

That women have accepted too easily man-made patterns of work-hours of work, lack of parttime work etc. And that with increased mechanization in the home men were becoming more involved in running it.

It was also pointed out that science has created two "inescapable" factors.

One, that women will increasingly have control over their own fertility" the most constructive single step towards progress all over the world."

Two, it has destroyed, because of modern advances, the traditional role of man the fighter, the protector of his women and children.

As a result of this will come "the most modern equality of all for women—equal vulnerability, equal danger."

This means that women will have thrust upon them "whether they like it or not," an increasing equality of responsibility more urgent and more fundamental than any for which their mothers fought. That is what tomorrow will be about.

In the foreseeable future, it was decided, women could (and no doubt will) inherit a world from which will be eliminated the formal discriminations which exist in law, employment, remuneration and educational opportunities.

Nevertheless, there will still be problems and these will be more subtle and more personal and therefore more difficult.

And those problems could easily include that of the working woman and her elderly relatives, it was said.

Which brings me back to the beginning of this column. Is the traditional grandmother disappearing?

Has a new grandmother image taken her place? If so, are there problems (new problems) surrounding this new image.

What do you think? Do write and tell me — care of this newspaper.

Bottle Can Harm Teeth

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — A Los Angeles dental professor says the nursing bottle a baby takes at bedtime may severely damage the child's emerging teeth.

Dr. David Powell says that pediatricians, dentists, parents and others must be educated to the damage that can be done by prolonged night-time use of nursing bottles.

He said that to avoid rampant tooth decay, "all children should be off the nursing bottle when they sleep by the age of 10 months."

Powell, an assistant professor in the department of pedodontics at the University of Southern California School of Dentistry, spoke Sunday at the annual session of the American Dental Association.

Decay induced by prolonged use of nursing bottles often leaves a child's teeth "so demineralized that they are rubbery," he said.

Powell said drinking from a bottle at meal times does not cause damage to the teeth. Rather, prolonged nap and nocturnal nursing is to blame, he said.

'Sickness' Imposed

DEAR ABBY: Another advice columnist keeps insisting that homosexuals are "sick." She says: "Thousands of homosexuals have written asking me where they can get straightened out so they must consider themselves twisted, or they wouldn't be asking for help. Occasionally I hear from homosexuals who are at peace with themselves, but they are few and far between. I believe the majority of homosexuals would be straight if they were really free to choose."

What say you, Dear Abby? — Times Reader.

DEAR READER: I say if a heterosexual had been raised to believe that his preference for the opposite sex was "sick," twisted, abominable, sinful, and a disgrace to his family, he would ask for help on how to "straighten himself out," too.

Homosexuality IS a problem because an unenlightened society has made it a problem, but I have received letters by the thousands (not just "occasionally") from gay people telling me that they wouldn't be straight if they had a choice. All they ask is to be allowed to love in their own way without facing the charge that they are "sick and twisted."

I say, love and let love.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 57-year-old grandfather, happy in a third marriage, which, though turbulent at times, has lasted for 16 years.

I must comment on a letter you printed about this virgin who married a widower and objected to sleeping in the same bed in which he slept with his former wife, now deceased. So disturbed is she by the memories her husband must have of the bed, she disposes of it behind her husband's back. And YOU approved of her getting rid of the bed! Both you and that new wife are out of your minds. What about the man himself? Were not his lips, his arms, and everything else also used in making love to his first wife?

How can she kick this wonderful old love-filled bed out into the street as used merchandise and yet sleep with the man who is also used merchandise?

The logic of the female mind I shall never understand. — Frank.

DEAR FRANK: Move over. Freud admitted that he couldn't understand it either. But I'll bet a lot of women (including this writer) understand it.

DEAR ABBY: May I answer "STUCK," regarding the nervy couple who drop in at dinnertime regularly several times a week?

This happened to us, too, and here is how we handled it: When they appeared at our door we said: "Come in — we were just about to have dinner, but we weren't expecting company. Make yourselves comfortable in the living room, and we will join you AFTER dinner."

A few times of this treatment should get the message across to the "nervy" couple, and you'll soon be (as my husband and I are) . . Unstuck.

DEAR ABBY: My husband's sister lost a full-term baby. He was born dead. We sent a sympathy card addressed to her and her husband. They were offended.

My father-in-law told me you shouldn't send sympathy cards in a case like this. Tell me, Abby, were my husband and I right or wrong? — UNIONTOWN, PA.

DEAR UNIONTOWN: You were right.

Cabinet Sounded On Equal Rights

OTTAWA (CP) — The National Council of Women went before the federal cabinet this week with 16 requests, ranging from admission of women into the RCMP to the need for additional spending on water purification.

Many of the resolutions from the 500,000-member organization involved the question of equal, economic opportunity for women.

In one area, Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde gave them short shrift.

This was in reply to a request that basic old-age pensions be increased to $150 a month from the present $105, a request Lalonde said he heard with some impatience.

He said the proposal would cost $972 million, and would result in the increased cheques going to many who didn't need it. For the same amount of money, the guaranteed income supplement, geared to need, could be increased by an average of $81 a month.

Council President Mrs. Gordon Armstrong of Victoria said she wants Canada to be the best in the world as far as old-age social security is concerned.

"And with the highest taxes," interjected Prime Minister Trudeau.

Most of the representations were given a sympathetic hearing by the cabinet.

Council asked that the government establish goals and guides for "a great utilization of women within the public sector" and that similar guides also be prepared for the private sector. Government contracts would be withheld from firms not complying.

Manpower Minister Robert Andras told the 50-member delegation that between now and 1980 the number of women in the working force is expected to increase by 45 per cent—twice the increase for men. His department was planning a national conference of employers to discuss equality of opportunity.

Labor Minister John Munro also assured the council that "very serious consideration" is being given to a request to eliminate all references to sex and marital status in fringe benefit plans under federal jurisdiction.

And Solicitor-General Warren Allmand said studies are underway to see whether women can be brought into the regular force of the RCMP.

The Council objected to the pension plan of members of Parliament, saying it is extremely burdensome on taxpayers to have pensions begin when members leave the House rather than at normal retirement age.

Trudeau said the plan had been agreed to by all parties.

Another request was that the national building code include special standards for the handicapped. Works Minister Jean-Eudes Dube said this was being done.

Alvarez-Welch Medical Report

By WALTER ALVAREZ

I read in the fine journal "Family Safety," that falls are the number one killer in the home today. Next to traffic accidents, they are the largest single cause of accidental deaths each year in North America: roughly 19,800 people die from accidental falls every year.

Even more interesting is the fact that two-thirds of the fatal home falls happen, not when the person is climbing high, but at floor level. Second on the death list are falls down stairways.

In the list of suggestions for safety at home, so as to avoid falls, I find the following good ideas:

While carrying children and other valuable things, make sure you wear the right clothing and footwear.

There is a picture showing a young woman who, while carrying her child up the front stairs of her home, got her shoe caught in the hem of her flared slacks and fell, injuring herself, but fortunately not the child.

Women who are wearing the new type of platform shoes with their very high heels should be particularly careful.

As I have written here before, there are many fractured ankles as a result of these platform shoes.

It is also dangerous for a woman to walk around in her stocking feet. She can easily slip down some wooden stairs or fall on a wooden floor. Throw rugs can easily cause a fall, unless they are equipped with non-skid pads. Going about the house at night without a night light is dangerous, especially if it is dark on the way to the bathroom. One woman I know hurt herself badly when she fell down a flight of stairs after tripping over her dog, who was lying at the top of the stairs in the dark.

Children have a tendency to leave their toys lying around, and many an adult has tripped over a roller skate or tricycle left on a walk or driveway.

Usually, falls occur because the person is carrying an armful of something which obscures his or her vision, or because the person is simply thinking about something else and not paying attention.

"Do-it-yourself" wall paperers, painters or roof repairers should be careful that their ladders are sturdy enough, and not wobbly or broken, and if they are aluminum, are not bent.

Also, working on roofs requires a good sense of balance. A person should remember that a climb that would have been easy at 30 may be unwise at 65, because unfortunately as we get older we tend to lose our good sense of balance.

Although people 65 years of age and older comprise only 9 per cent of the population, these people have 80 per cent of the fatal falls at home.

Every year over 1,100 Canadians lose their lives in drowning accidents. Many of these people could have been saved, if rescue breathing had been applied in time.

Rescue breathing, the mouth-to-mouth method of artificial respiration, cannot only be applied to drowning victims. It is equally useful to save persons rendered unconscious from electric shock, suffocation, inhalation of poisonous gas or an overdose of drugs.

The illustrated 4-page leaflet "Rescue Breathing" points out that rescue breathing can be learned easily and that it does not require any special equipment. Furthermore, the size of the rescuer in relation to the victim is unimportant. With the correct technique, somebody who weighs say 95 lbs., can easily resuscitate a heavy adult.

The leaflet outlines step-by-step the simple procedure of rescue breathing. It then explains how to handle different drowning situations, like reviving somebody in shallow water, from poolside or in deep water. It stresses that every second counts.

British Columbia Surgeon Cools Acupuncture Myths

By PATRICIA McCORMACK

How effective is acupuncture, the ancient Chinese practice of inserting needles into the body to anesthesize or treat a patient?

In a new book, "The Amazing Story of Health Care in New China and What We Can Learn From It" (Rodale Press) a British Columbia neurosurgeon, Dr. K. K. Jain, says this:

"In my opinion, acupuncture definitely is effective and does have a place in the practice of medicine. However, one should be a little hesitant about accepting all the claims. Acupuncture is not a panacea."

Acupuncture has undergone much advancement and change down through the years, Jain notes. Computers are in the picture now, for instance. And electricity sometimes is used, with low voltage jolts sent through the needles to intensify and stretch out the effects of the acupuncture. Hollow needles also are used sometimes, with drugs forced through them into puncture points.

Jain, who was born in India, practices in North Vancouver. He went to China for a month in 1971 with a group from the University of British Columbia.

About computers and acupuncture, he writes:

"Computerized mannikins are available with buttons for the symptoms. After the practitioner punches a combination of symptoms and the location of the organ, the computer lights up, indicating the point where the needle should be inserted."

Approximately 1,000 acupuncture points have been determined by trial and error down through the centuries. The points are located on the 12 major meridians of the body, each corresponding to a major organ system of the body.

Jain says:

"The acupuncture point for the right lower quadrant or the abdomen is located on the outer aspect of the right knee. The acupuncture point for the head is on the big toe. The acupuncture point for the heart is the wrist, at the base of the little finger."

Jain says the acupuncturists avoid hitting blood vessels, nerves or important organs.

Describing an operation involving acupuncture anasthesia, Jain said a nurse acupuncturist used electrical stimulation. She started with stimulation from a nine volt that post-hypnotic suggestion battery at 120 cycles per minute. During the time the incision was being made in the scalp frequency was stepped up to 200 cycles. Jain said following the two-hour operation for removal of a brain tumor the patient was able to get up and walk back to his ward, with the help of an orderly.

Jain describes three operations he witnessed in China involving acupuncture anaesthesia. Generally, throughout the surgery blood pressure, pulse and respiration, monitored, remained quite stable. Blood loss was minimal and no transfusions were required.

Jain says there is as yet no scientific proof of the mode of action or acupuncture, only theories.

"The ancient Chinese hypothesized that diseases are due to imbalance of Yin (negative) and Yang (positive)," he writes.

"Acupuncture restores this balance. The Chinese attempt to explain this balance in terms of what we know as the autonomic or self-governing nervous system."

Jain dismissed the theory that post-hypnotic suggestion is responsible for the effectiveness of acupuncture. Among his reasons:

—"Acupuncture is effective in children and animals although they are not good subjects for hypnosis."

—"The treatment has been used on millions of people throughout China over the past several years. It is difficult to believe that this vast number of people were all hypnotized."

Jain says not every patient can be operated on under acupuncture anaesthesia. Some nervous and tense patients decide against it. For them, the Chinese use general anaesthesia.

"Generally, operations below the level of the waist are difficult to perform under acupuncture anaesthesia," he says.

One of the dangers of acupuncture as treatment for physical complaints, he feels, is that a serious illness may be overlooked.

"For this reason alone, an uncontrolled practice of acupuncture in Western society would be dangerous.

"Modern medicine prides itself on early detection of disease and treatment before developments of complications. Treating painful syndromes with acupuncture might mask symptoms and delay vital treatment. In China acupuncturists work closely to the medical profession so a serious condition is seldom overlooked."

Jain says in North America there is danger in acupuncturists setting up independent practices like nauturopaths or chiropractors. Patients seeking treatment from such an acupuncturist would not be under the supervision of the family physician. An acupuncturist who is not trained in medicine, he states, wouldn't recognize the symptoms of more serious disease.

The Chinese are anxious to find out how acupuncture works, Jain reports.

"The basic research in acupuncture being done by the Chinese at the institute of physiology in Shanghai was not interrupted during the cultural revolution. Dr. Hsiantung, the Chinese scientist in charge of this project, studied anatomy and physiology of the nervous system at Yale University (1936-37) and Rockefeller Institute (1949-54). His team of 16 researchers conducts three types of experiments on dogs."

In one, a cut is made in the skin. The pain impulses are recorded, acupuncture is done and the pain impulses are recorded again. Jain says this demonstrates "the blocking of the impulses at a more peripheral level."

"These experiments are being done objectively and the results (yet unpublished) will be very significant," Jain says.

Spud Loaf Dough Lasts a Week In Refrigerator

By HILDA BEASTALL

The only mystery about breadmaking is that when made with basically good ingredients and care, it turns out to be so totally satisfying of hunger. Breadmaking families are getting back to the out of date theory that good bread is indeed a food and not just a vehicle for holding together sandwich fillings.

A recipe for Potato Bread has been requested. I have made several potato breads in the past few years and liked all of them. The one given today has the advantage of being stored as uncooked dough in the refrigerator and used in small quantities during the seven days recommended as storage time limit. Buns, fruit coffee cake, apple roll coffee cake, or dinner rolls can then be produced on any day you have a baking oven. Just remember to take out the portion of dough needed, about two hours in advance of the oven being ready. See details in instructions.

For your filing system, this is called Refrigerator potato bread.

REFRIGERATOR POTATO BREAD

1 large potato
1 tsp. salt
1 c. water
½ c. soft margarine
2 Tbsp. demarara sugar
½ c. skim milk powder
3 small eggs
2 Tbsp. dry yeast
¼ c. warm water
1 tsp. sugar
2½ c. wholewheat flour
2½ c. unbleached flour
3 Tbsp. wheat germ

Wash and peel potato thinly; chop into ½-inch pieces. Add salt and water, boil until fork tender. Remove from heat, stir in margarine and 2 tablespoons of sugar. Using either a wooden fork (or the electric beater) beat until potato is mashed. If most of the cup of water has evaporated, stir in about a half cup more, using hot water or hot potato water from another day, and mix well.

Add the milk powder and the eggs; beat until blended.

Measure warm water into small bowl, add teaspoon of sugar and sprinkle yeast on top. Let stand for 5 minutes until bubbly. Stir down with spoon.

Add yeast mixture to warm (not hot) potato mixture; stir in measured flours and wheat germ, enough to make a soft dough.

If soft enough, the dough can be beaten with a few strokes of the wooden spoon to make it smooth and elastic. If firmer, turn it out on lightly floured board and knead the dough a few strokes until smooth and elastic.

Place in greased mixing bowl, cover, and let rise in a warm draught free place until doubled in bulk.

Punch down with the fist, turn the edges of the dough into the center and turn the ball of dough upside down. Cover and store in refrigerator, where it keeps up to 7 days.

Next day, or any day, take off the portion of dough required, and let it stand uncovered at room temperature (72 degs. F.) for 20 minutes. Then shape as desired into rolls, buns or bread.

Put into greased pans and let rise, covered, in a warm draught free place until doubled in bulk, about 1 hour.

Bake rolls and buns at 400 degs. for 15 minutes; bread, coffee cake, or large filled twists need oven reduced to 350 degs. after first 15 minutes. Watch that they do not scorch in the second 15 minute period. Loose foil covering prevents scorching.

Talking to Tulips No Laughing Matter

By NICK COLE

LONDON FWF — After years of laborious and costly research, scientists have dug up the truth about your garden; it is, they bodly claim, full of potential friends and enemies. Their revelations have nothing to do with the birds and the bees. They are concerned with nothing more nor less than plants.

Beyond a joke? Well, the scientists are treating it quite seriously. And a formidable body of research currently in train by two major nations proves it. Their thesis, which makes even the harmless daisy look like a candidate for the psycho-analyst's window-sills, is simply this; that plants can and do feel emotion — emotion, that is, in the very sense we humans know it.

Not only do plants actually enjoy the feel of sun and rain on their leaves, but they experience pain, sorrow and even aggressive tendencies, according to researchers. Try and get a "friendly" dahlia to mate with another flower type — matched from a similar species, for instance, and it immediately rejects it, and not merely for automatic, biological reasons. So selective is it that it will wait for contact with pollen from a preferred partner.

It has often been taught that plants are sensitive; an ancient legend has it that the mandrake plant screamed when uprooted. "The plant is very much nearer to us than we thought. It is not a mere mass of vegetable growth. Every fibre of it is instinct with sensibility." Not the words of a modern scientist, but those of Sir Chandra Bose 47 years ago.

An eminent botanist, he was far from being a crank, although he may have overstated his case with the declaration that "plants have hearts similar to animals." Nevertheless, his public lectures in London were a sell-out and helped set a trend of investigation that has been pursued ever since.

Through a series of complex tests audiences saw how a mimosa is 10 times more sensitive than humans to electric shocks, and also how when the tip of a leaf is bitten, the plant's nerves turn, the dull grey side of the leaves outwards to protect it from further harm. By fattening up one mimosa artifically, Bose further demonstrated how the nerve endings become deadened — and used it to draw a parallel with the dangers of decadence in human society!

Other plant pioneers pushed forward the frontiers Bose had opened up; within the last decade, synthetic hormones have been used to delay death in plants, the experiment showing that natural decay in plants is a forerunner of microbial decay in man.

Another experiment, conducted by the Institute of Fodder in Russia, yielded information that plants operate a primitive community system, helping each other in times of stress.

A plant left in an artificial desert received water from others outside the parched area, although neither roots nor leaves touched. Scientists are still trying to discover how this works.

Having established that plants contain a special kind of sensory mechanism, it seemed a short step to find out how unique it actually is; the gap was filled by the Soviets once again, and only within the last few months.

Dr. Veniamin Pushkin, a psychologist, hypnotised his assistant and told him things calculated to induce pleasurable or unpleasant responses. An encephalograph attached to a nearby geranium at once registered parallel emotions.

This was the basis for his belief that plants can feel "joy, sorrow, pain, or excitement." He argues that if the cells of a living plant respond to processes in the human nervous system there must be some similarity between processes in plant and nerve cells.

Both cells, he believes, "speak a similar language," and that the workings of the mind — perception, thinking, memory — are fundamentally a specialization of the information service which occurs at plant level.

The implication of these studies, and similar research in America — which has, incidentally, shown that plants grow nervous if their fellows are destroyed — is that new light could be thrown on the functioning of human brain cells.

It could also be harnessed to prolong plant life, prevent the annual "autumn holocaust," and ensure better harvests with a consequent easing of world food shortages.

Most Abortions 'Illegal'

TORONTO (CP) — Dr. Jan Dukszta, New Democratic Party member of the Ontario legislature for the Toronto riding of Parkdale, says 100,000 Canadian women have abortions every year — most of them illegally because they have money or medical contacts.

Dukszta told the Ontario Conference of Women that an abortion is easily obtained by women with a doctor as a friend or relative.

"Or if you have money you can fly to New York or drive to Buffalo," he said.

Long-Hair Styles On the Way Out?

OTTAWA (CP) — "The long-hair syndrome may be on the way out for Canadian youth," says Dan Darling, public relations officer for the Army Cadet League of Canada. He draws that conclusion from a recent increase in the enrolment of cadets, a traditionally short-hair group if there ever was one.

"Defence department staff cuts in 1968 cut down cadet numbers through lack of people to work with them," he said in an interview.

"Long hair was a complementary factor which took the enrolment down below 30,000."

He maintained that the 35,000 cadets enrolled today are of better calibre then their predecessors.

"In the past, particularly in the West, cadets were compulsory at many schools, probably due to a large number of retired ex-officers in the educational system. A lot of cadets were just filling in time."

There are cadets corps across the country, including one in the Yukon and 10 in the Northwest Territories. The hair requirements are the same in all regions, Mr. Darling said.

Although more lenient than in the past, the cadet's hair must still be above the collar.

The defence department takes an active role in army cadets. Equipment, transportation, and training are under the department's control.

In 1971 it limited the number of army cadets to 52,000 in order to give each cadet the best training possible.

School boards, service clubs and in some cases defence buildings provide the accommodations. Most of the weekly instructors are volunteers but the summer training staff is composed of regular armed forces personnel.

Darling said that probably 56 per cent of the more than 80,000 people in the armed forces have at one time been in the army, naval or air cadet services.

Egypt, Syria Reach Terms

By JIM HOAGLAND

BEIRUT (WP) — Egypt and Syria have agreed on the outlines of a common bargaining position for the proposed Arab-Israeli peace talks and will press for the establishment of an autonomous Palestinian region on the west bank of the Jordan River as part of a settlement, qualified Arab sources said.

These sources who have excellent contacts within President Anwar Sadat's cabinet, reported the Egyptians were also backing the use of international peacekeeping forces in areas that would be demilitarized as the Israelis withdraw from occupied Arab territory.

The Syrians are known to have serious reservations about this, and President Hafez Al Assad Monday night underscored the divergence of views between Egypt and Syria on the Oct. 22 ceasefire, which he said "took us by surprise."

In an unusually candid radio and television speech, which was delivered in a subdued tone, Assad indicated that Egypt had not consulted Syria before accepting the ceasefire, and he hinted at a major internal crisis that Syria's acceptance two days later had created.

He reiterated that Syria had agreed to stop fighting and to negotiate with Israel only because the Soviet Union and Sadat had assured him that this would lead to "complete Israeli withdrawal without projudice to the rights of the Palestinian people."

Syria would resume the war if these conditions were not met he added. In an indirect first admission to the Syrian people that Israel now occupies more Syrian territory than it did when the war started, he said that the ceasefire had left "a section of the land in the penetrated areas in the enemy's hands."

But Syria's military position on the ceasefire line was substantially weakened Monday night when Iraq announced after Assad's speech that it was withdrawing its troops from the Egyptian and Syrian fronts.

Iraq, which had three armored divisions in Syria at the end of the war, has rejected the ceasefire. The presence of the Iraqi forces in Egypt and Syria "raises delicate and serious military and security issues" after the Syrian and Egyptian acceptance of the ceasefire, a statement issued by the ruling revolutionary command council through the Iraqi news agency said.

These are the key points of the Egyptian proposed initial bargaining position which still might be modified after the consultations now going on in the Arab world, according to the Arab sources:

—The Arabs will drop their long-standing demand that talks should open only after total Israeli withdrawal from the Egyptian, Syrian and Jordanian territories occupied in the 1967 war.

But they still seek an Israeli commitment to total withdrawal, even if it is phased out over a long period, and an initial symbolic Israeli withdrawal from some of the territory as the talks begin.

—Egypt is prepared to discuss the establishment of large demilitarized zones on Arab territory as the Israelis withdraw and the use of international peacekeeping forces to police the areas for a number of years.

Egypt would agree to some form of long-term international control over Sharm El Sheikh, the Sinai control point for shipping entering the straits of Tiran.

Syria, which for tactical and political reasons will let Egypt take the lead in shaping the talks, wants an early return of most of the plateau land on the Golan Heights and especially the provincial capital of Kuneitra.

But it is not clear if the Syrians have given firm agreement to a reported Egyptian suggestion that the United Nations Emergency Force should take up positions on the demilitarized plateau and that the Israelis be allowed to retain for an indefinite period control over the crests that overlook settlements in northern Israel.

A Syrian foreign ministry official briefing newsmen in Damascus Monday said that Syria had not asked the UN emergency force to police the Syrian-Israeli ceasefire line.

—The Arabs will stress the right of the Palestinians to "self-determination" and are prepared to discuss the holding of plebiscites in the west bank, Gaza strip and east Jerusalem, all populated by Palestinians and occuped by Israel in 1967. The Palestinians should be free to decide for themselves whether they want an independent state, to join King Hussein's proposed United Arab Kingdom or take other action, Egypt will argue with Syrian support.

ISRAELI PEACE HOPE IRONY

By ALVIN ROSENFELD

TEL AVIV (WP) — The newest song hit here tells of desert sands and desert battles, but its chorus goes:

"I promise you, little girl of mine,
This will be the last war."

The song is only a matter of days old, but many Israelis already feel that its refrain is ironic and that the hope for peace is dwindling away. "I felt goose-pimples," said one Israeli, "when I heard that song on the car radio today."

The mood may be temporary, but some local observers call it a mood of fury. Certainly wherever one goes here, one is assaulted by angry words.

The burden of those words, poured out by taxi drivers middle-class housewives and bankers is this—the Soviet Union is playing it straight down the line, providing total support for its Arab allies while the U.S. is tryng to walk a tight-rope between Israel and the Arabs. The result, as these Israelis see it, is a basic inequality which the Arabs will try to exploit to avoid any kind of permanent settlement.

The public sees Israel as being pressured by the U.S. to, inter alia, supply the encircled Third Egyptian Army but sees no one pressuring Egypt of Syria to provide lists of Israeli POWs or think in positive terms about peace.

"This unilateral pressure," an editorial in the major circulation daily Ma'Ariv said, "will even further dissuade the Egyptians from negotiating — it lessens the prospects for a settlement while creating a united front of the great powers against Israel."

Public opinion here, like public opinion everywhere, looks inward. But the argument here is that the U.S. is making an error from its own national viewpoint that Moscow and not Washington will be credited for Arab political victories.

"We know," said one Israeli close to official thinking, "that the U.S. wants peace in this area. But peace will escape us and America if the U.S. undercuts Israel because Israel is the only stabilizing force in the area."

The Israeli passion — and it is that — over the POW issue is obviously emotional but it is politcal as well. "If the Arabs will do something about our prisoners — and do it fast," said one Israeli, "that will represent the beginning of a change in heart. If they are unrepentent even on such a question there is no hope."

For such people, the Third Army should be used as a bargaining card. Egypt started the war, the argument goes, and if Egypt wants the Third Army relieved let it pay by coming to terms — on the POWs, on negotiations looking toward peace.

"We're like the Third Army," an angry Israeli said. "Politically we are encircled." The words may not have been an accurate or balanced political analysis but they did seem to reflect today's national mood.

Survival New Stoney Way

MORLEY, Alta. (CP) — In 1969, Stoney Indians on the Morley Reserve boycotted their grade school because they were fed up with having no voice in the education of their children.

As a result, when school started this September, the Stoneys not only had a new kindergarten centre but their children began learning Stoney language, history, philosophy anl social studies.

They are being taught how to survive in the wilderness and how to survive culturally in the white man's world.

The school has come a long way since James Kaquitts, 33, director of graphic arts for the Stoney Cultural Education Program (SCEP), was a student on the reserve 40 miles west of Calgary.

He remembers that if any of the Indian children were caught speaking Stoney in school their white teachers would give them a cuff on the head with a book.

"We want our children to grow up proud because they are Indian—so they won't feel discouraged and ashamed when they confront white society," said Mr. Kaquitts.

"As it stands now, when children leave the reserve they don't have enough background in their own culture to be really Indian and they don't have enough knowledge of white society to be considered white—so they are stuck in the middle with the negative aspects of both races.

"When many Indians leave the reserve they actually start to believe that Indians are only bums and drunks because that's all they've ever heard said about them."

SCEP is the most advanced Indian education program in Canada, although similar programs have been started on various reserves across the country, particularly by the Ojibway.

The program has its roots in a Bible translation program undertaken by several Stoneys and Warren Harbeck of Wycliffe Bible translators. Stoney was not a written language and, in the process of transcribing sounds to phonetic symbols, a Stoney-English dictionary was developed.

Three years ago, the Stoney band council hired Ian Getty to research the tribe's legal title to land around the Big Horn Dam.

Mr. Getty initiated a program, later funded by the federal government's Local Initiatives Program, in which 20 Stoneys sought out Indian elders and tape-recorded their accounts of Stoney history, philosophy and legends.

These tapes, translated and indexed, together with the dictionary formed the groundwork for SCEP, which receives about $10,000 a month from the Alberta Indian Education Centre.

About 20 Stoneys and four non-Indians are working for SCEP, developing story lines for readers, drawing maps for history texts and writing language primers in both Stoney and English.

The curriculum incorporates the new courses with traditional subjects such as science, math, world history and social studies.

Although there are no certified Indian teachers at Morley, Stoney teacher aides are available to help with instruction, especially in language studies.

The attitude which gives responsibility for Indian education to Indians is a drastic change from government policy 10 years ago which favored closing reserve schools and integrating native children into white institutions.

At that time the Morley school was cut to only the first three grades. Children in higher grades were bused to other communities and educational funds allotted to the reserve were put into surrounding white schools.

Children who wanted to attend high school had to board in Calgary during the week and return to their families only on weekends.

"Most of the youngsters found it very hard to adjust to living in the city and in the white culture and they just couldn't adapt," said Chief John Snow. "As a result hardly any of our students finished high school."

The Stoneys hope to see a high school built on the reserve within the next two years for both Indians and whites.

THIN MANN STRANGER TO FRIENDS

TORONTO (CP) — In the shower room of a Toronto golf club a man asked his companion: "Has anyone ever told you that you look like a thin version of Larry Mann?"

The thin version of Larry Mann grinned as he told the story. The expatriate Torontonian, now a Hollywood character actor, has taken off 103 pounds since he began dieting a year ago.

In a recent television role, he had to wear wads of padding to play the "heavy."

"And you can imagine how I felt at night when I could take it off and be cool and unburdened," said the actor, in town to film a TV series. "All I have to do is remember when I couldn't."

Some of his best friends didn't know him when they ran into him. Before the diet, his six-foot frame carried 271 pounds.

Now, apart from looking younger, he says he feels better and works with more energy and stamina for long hours under the hot lights.

Strict attention to his dieting program changed the former food addict who "couldn't carry a dozen doughnuts home without eating six on the way" to a firmly self-regimented eater.

He tried a diet several years ago, lost 62 pounds, then slipped. A photograph of himself at his son's wedding last September clinched the decision to return.

"It was easier this time because there are so many new foods, recipes and good-tasting items there hadn't been 10 years ago," he said.

His waistline, 52 last year, now is 34 inches. And his chest has shrunk from 54 to 40.

"I'll keep my weekly guard and never let it catch up with me again," the actor said. "I feel too great."

FURTHER COMINCO CLEANUP ORDERED

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Workmen's Compensation Board Tuesday issued 30 orders for improved pollution control at Cominco Ltd.'s lead-zinc smelter at Trail.

The WCB had earlier threatened to fine Cominco $25,000 following company inaction on an earlier clean-up ordered by the board, but withdrew the fine after the company submitted a letter outlining the anti-pollution action it had taken or was planning.

The latest report said it is doubtful whether the smelter can ever operate without some degree of contamination.

"It is a matter of striking an appropriate balance between the demands of production and the health of the work force," the report said.

Clerk Was 'Incoherent'

SAFETY PUSHED

VANCOUVER (CP) — The city's housing committee voted unanimously Tuesday to ask council to move up the November, 1975 deadline for implementation of a new fire bylaw to July 1, 1974.

The tougher regulations would apply to hotels and office buildngs and would require sprinkler systems throughout such buildings as well as adequate fire escapes and other safety measures.

The committee will also ask council to move up to July 1, 1974, a plan to implement operators' permits for lodging houses in the skid road area.

The move to advance the deadlines followed the Oct. 21 fire at the Commercial Hotel in which five persons died.

Committee chairman, Ald. Mike Harcourt, said it had become apparent that hotel operators were delaying as long as possible in renovating their buildings.

"If they're waiting to do it just during the last six months before the bylaw goes into effect, then we should just move it up," Ald. Harcourt said.

VANCOUVER (CP) — A resident if the Commercial Hotel, which burned Oct. 21 with the loss of five lives, told a coroner's jury Tuesday the hotel's night clerk was "incoherent" shortly before the fire.

Duane Shrump, a hotel resident, testified that the clerk "had a glass in his hand and was leaning heavily over the desk" at 11 p.m. when Shrump entered the hotel.

He said he had seen the clerk, Stanley Pawlak, drunk at other times and had drunk with him on other occasions.

But Pawlak later testified that he was not drinking on the night of the fire and what Shrump thought was a glass in his hand was actually a flashlight. He also said he had never drunk with Shrump.

Shrump said he was in his room reading about 2 a.m. when he heard a noise in the hallway. He opened the door and looked out and saw a red glow at the end of the hallway. His fourth-floor room was just three doors from the women's washroom where the fire began.

He said he ran down the hallway looking for a fire extinguisher or an alarm but could find neither, so he pounded on doors to wake people.

At the start of the inquest, coroner Glen McDonald told the jury they would look into possible criminal negligence on the part of the night clerk. The inquest continues.

PHILLIPS FORECASTS SUBWAY IN 8 YEARS

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mayor Art Phillips said Tuesday Vancouver could have a subway system in operation within eight years once the city and the provincial government are agreed on routes.

After a meeting with city officials and V. J. Parker, director of transit for the provincial municipal affairs department, Phillips said Vancouver could have a subway system complete with 20 stations or more by 1982.

Mayor Phillips said he, Ald. Setty Pendakur and Ald. Walter Hardwick have been meeting for almost four months with provincial government officials to discuss subway proposals.

No Place for Me—Phil

VANCOUVER (CP) — Phil Gaglardi said Tuesday there doesn't seem to be room any more in British Columbia politics for unconventional individualists.

That, he said, is one of the main reasons he decided not to run for the B.C. Social Credit Party leadership.

"I am a very, very outspoken fellow," he said. "I have always been in trouble because of my method of operation, my direct dealings with people.

"For example, when I was Highways Minister if a contractor needed to be jacked up on something I would not depend on bureaucracy or red tape — I'd get in touch with him directly. I would get criticized for it a lot, but let me tell you that saved this province millions and millions of dollars.

He said he is still receiving encouragement to run, but accepts convention rules.

Gaglardi said that in making his decision on whether to be a candidate he asked himself, does government need men like me today?"

"My conclusion is that I am too abrupt and forthright and too much misunderstood," he said.

What is wanted today, he added, is "perhaps the more soft soapy, wishy-washy, milktoast type of individual, who doesn't say anything drastic."

99 Rule on Food For UN Agencies In 30 Nations

By ADRIENNE FARRELL

GENEVA (Reuter) — A United Nations commission of 99 food and health experts is continually watching over the quality of the world's food to quality of the world's food to ensure that it is fit to eat.

It has the task of drawing up international safety standards for all types of food, particularly canned goods.

It also evaluates health hazards arising from anything added to food either intentionally, through the use of such additives as coloring matter, or unintentionally, through residues of pesticides or minerals.

The commission, known as the Codex Alimentarius Commission, was set up jointly by the UN's Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) and the World Health Organization (W.H.O.) in 1961. Its recommendations are put into practice by more than 30 countries, mostly in Europe.

So far it has drawn up standards for 100 products, including milk, cheese, meat and a large number of canned fruits, vegetables and fish. Standards are embodied in a massive codex, which lays down exact criteria for each category of food.

The commission has also evaluated about 400 food additives, such as solvents, colors, preservatives, sweeteners, synthetic flavors and thickening elements, to determine whether they are harmful to man.

Wherever possible the commission makes an estimate of the Acceptable Daily Intake (ADI) of any food additive.

Deliberate and gross adulteration of foodstuffs with harmful chemicals, once practised in many countries, has largely disappeared through the enforcement of food legislation.

But an increasing variety of chemicals is being used to protect crops, livestock and stored food and may present a serious danger to man if improperly used.

Agricultural products may contain minute traces of arsenic, lead and mercury or residues of pesticides applied to crops in the field or during storage.

Canned products may become contaminated with chemicals from processing machinery or containers.

A typical North American diet, with its usual proportion of canned foods, contains about four milligrams of tin per person per day, whereas a typical European diet will contain only half that amount.

The expert committee considers the amount of tin now found in food does not appear to pose any toxicological problem, but the situation must be continually watched.

Many chemicals added to food to improve the keeping quality or to enhance its color, flavor and texture, have already been assessed.

Several categories of additives remain to be dealt with, including packaging materials, flavor enhancers and residues of growth-stimulating hormones.

The codex commission considers the use of additives justified to maintain the nutritional quality of a food, to help it keep and thereby avoid wastage, or to make it attractive to the consumer.

It condemns any additives which disguise foods or deceive the consumer.

Actress Likes Hiding

By WILLIAM GLOVER

NEW YORK (AP) — On stage and screen, Rachel Roberts deliberately hides.

"I'd like to be one of those people who relentlessly come on," she said.

"I don't want to be a personality player, that would make me feel very naked and nervous. I much prefer to translate the character the playwright created."

If there has ever been a role that closely resembled her in the long string that began at Stratford-on-Avon and now brings her to Broadway for the first time, it is a Roberts secret.

Her anti-ego acting slant may have been influenced by marital exposure to the high-impact stardom of Rex Harrison. The pair divorced two years ago.

"Contentment," was the purring one-word description which the 46-year-old actress gave of her private unwed life now.

Her decision to accept an offer to play a season here came at the behest of Lindsay Anderson, one of England's ranking film directors "who is my greatest friend, personally and professionally."

MET AT FESTIVAL

Both were attending the Cannes film festival last spring when chance brought her career into conjunction with Hal Prince, Broadway's eminent impresario, in shaky fashion.

Prince had seen her a bit earlier on London's stage in Alpha Beta, an abrasive domestic drama. After meeting her at the festival he sent her a note suggesting she join the New Phoenix presentation this fall of two plays.

"I never got the letter because he sent it to the wrong hotel," she says. "By sheer accident, he mentioned it three days later to a friend who told me."

Another gremlin popped up after she said yes. "The first scripts he sent me got lost somehow. I'd signed up for two plays that I'd never seen. When I finally got to read them I knew Lindsay had been absolutely 100-per-cent right when he said 'do it.'"

OFFERS CHALLENGE

The plays are a farce, Chemin de Fer, by Georges Feydeau, and The Visit, by Friedrich Duerrenmatt. The latter was the last great Broadway triumph of the Lunts, a circumstance which doesn't shake her determination even though she knows some spectators will be comparing her with Lynn Fontanne.

The twin repertory is due at Broadway's Lyceum Nov. 26.

Tandem rehearsals—with Prince directing the Duerrenmatt and Stephen Porter the Feydeau—were enhanced considerably for the wide-eyed actress by the occasional prowling interruptions of Jack, the rehearsal hall's tabby mouse-catcher and a natural-born upstager. Miss Roberts has a bounding enthusiasm for cats.

"It's probably the Welsh witch in me," she smiled.

The yogurt yogurt lovers love.

Sea Hawks Pine For Outboards

TORONTO (CP) — George Pearce is a man with a dream.

The retired navy man is the skipper of Sea Hawk I—a schooner that once served as a lifeboat but now is flagship of a motley fleet of 10 vessels Mr. Pearce and his crew of 15 are refurbishing.

The present crew of 11 boys and two girls, all high school students, are being paid with funds out of a $9,000 Opportunities for Youth (OFY) grant Mr. Pearce was awarded. They are teaching navigational skills to 30 younger children who will spend this fall on Toronto's Algonquin Island learning to be Sea Hawks.

Mr. Pearce, who formed the Sea Hawks more than 20 years ago, says the OFY grant is putting new lifeblood into the organization.

Becoming a Sea Hawk is not a simple matter. An aspiring applicant must be able to swim 100 yards with his clothes on and must also be able to use a lifejacket and lifeline.

The club is in need of outboard motors.

"We're very short of outboards," Mr. Pearce said in an interview. "Except for the Sea Hawk's outboard, the rest are just about shot."

The skipper is also after a larger boat that could be kept on the mainland to serve as an on-shore training base for those who find it difficult to make regular trips to the island.

A winch is another much-needed piece of equipment.

"If we could just get a power winch," Mr. Pearce said, thinking aloud and eyeing the miniature boatyard about him.

He dreams of a heated place to serve as clubhouse and boathouse and a boat large enough that the boys could sleep on board.

"I'd like to take them all around the lakes."

The skipper hopes to have racing competitions among the vessels in the fleet and to teach signalling.

The fleet includes a cabin cruiser hauled up from the bottom of the lake three seasons ago and a punt that had three feet of decayed stern removed, leaving it a bit off balance, but as Mr. Pearce says it's still a good work boat.

ANY PORT in a storm, goes the saying, and cat and dog seem willing to bury the hatchet at least until rain lets up in Sarnia, Ont.

SPOONS TAUGHT HER STEPS

By MARJORIE WILD

HAMILTON (CP) — Tami Boccaccio has been blind since the oxygen that saved her life six years ago when she was a premature baby in a hospital incubator caused separation of her retinas.

Her mother, Grace Boccaccio, didn't know the baby was blind when she brought her home to her father, Dr. J. G. Boccaccio, and her older sister, Terri.

Then one day when she was feeding Tami, Mrs. Boccaccio looked into the baby's eyes and knew something was terribly wrong. She seemed to see right through them.

Doctors confirmed that Tami was blind. Since then she has had to be fitted with artificial eyes.

Mrs. Boccaccio said that after her first shocked reaction, "I decided all we could do was look after her and give her love and then it's up to her."

She has worked to make the child as independent as possible.

She recalls Tami used to walk around the house with her hands outstretched to ward off objects. Her mother was determined she should learn to walk normally.

SPOONS HELPED

At the time, Tami loved to hold spoons, so her mother put a spoon in each hand and told her if she dropped one, she wouldn't find it for her. Then she had a good cry while Tami, holding her precious spoons, learned to walk around without feeling her way.

A big decision was made two years ago when Tami was enrolled at the nursery school at the Jewish Community Centre. Elsie Anderson, who has taught Tami most of the time, said she was a bit wild when she arrived.

Edna Hutchison, social worked among blind preschool children for the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, said Tami almost exhausted the nursery school staff.

But she has learned to get along with the other children, to enjoy the school and even sometimes be one of its leaders.

She spent part of the summer at a day camp for blind preschoolers, and the next big step comes this fall. She is enrolled in the Ontario School for the Blind at Brantford. She has visited the school with her parents, and chosen the bed she wants.

Mrs. Boccaccio said she doesn't think Tami will be homesick. She has made it a point to have her stay overnight or for weekends with friends occasionally.

Now her mother has a new goal. She is going to learn braille so they can write to each other.

Siberian Scar Tests Theory Of 'Black Hole' From Space

By PETER MOSLEY

LONDON (Reuter) — What on earth could flatten 60,000 trees in Siberia with a mighty bang but leave not even a crater?

The question has bothered scientists since the explosion occurred on the night of June 30, 1908. A meteorite would surely have left a big crater.

Theories have ranged from the bizarre to the ridiculous. One was that the blast resulted from the aerial destruction of a nuclear-powered spaceship from another civilization.

Rubbish, say the Russians.

And that is also likely to be their response to the latest theory from two U.S. scientists. The Americans say they believe the forest was destroyed by one of those mysterious "black holes" from outer space plunging clean through the earth and out the other side.

The "black hole" theory may sound as far-out as the alien spaceship idea, but scientists A. A. Jackson and Michel P. Ryan, writing to Nature magazine from the University of Texas centre for relativity theory, produced some persuasive evidence.

A black hole, according to theory—and no one has yet positively located one—is what results when a star runs out of nuclear energy. Instead of exploding, as with an excess of energy, it implodes—falls in on itself. Its collapsing atoms become smaller and smaller and more and more dense.

So great is the gravity of these black holes that anything within reach, including light, is sucked in and swallowed. What happens to this trapped matter then is really beyond the understanding even of the theorists.

The whole thing springs from Einstein's theory of relativity.

Jackson and Ryan advance the argument that the black hole which struck Siberia in 1908 had condensed to the point where it was no bigger than a speck of dust but weighed many millions of tons.

It might have swallowed up the earth had it not been travelling at "escape velocity"—a speed in excess of 25,000 miles an hour, enough to break away from the earth's orbit.

This speed, the Americans say, meant that it simply drilled right through the earth, gobbling up a minimum of matter en route, and shot out the other side in the North Atlantic somewhere between the Azores and Newfoundland.

They calculate that one effect of such an event would be to cause a great column of blue light at the point where the black hole entered the earth. And they note that this is precisely what eyewitnesses reported seeing at the time.

What's more, the sort of temperatures it would generate would cause the scorching found on trees at the centre of the Siberian impact.

And there would be no crater. Just a pin-prick.

But the Russians have some ideas of their own. While still referring to the event as "the tungus meteorite," they admit that no known meteorite could cause that much damage—sheer destruction for 20 miles in all directions.

But supposing it was the core of a comet, the so-called comet head, which exploded in the air before striking the ground?

That was the theory which a team of scientists set out to test last year.

And in a report which goes without comment by the Americans, they said their findings confirmed it was indeed an exploding comet head.

Houseboy Got Gold Message

By PETER BROWN

WAU, Papua-New Guinea (Reuter) — Omas Gemora quit his job as a houseboy 20 years ago to look for gold.

Today he is one of Papua-New Guinea's richest men, controlling coffee plantations, mining leases, restaurants and a trucking company.

The 42-year-old Gemora, who never had formal education, is a native of the remote highlands of this vast territory, administered by Australia but now nearing nationhood, which occupies about half the huge island of New Guinea.

Gemora says he has lost count of how much he is worth, though friends say he is well on the way to becoming a millionaire.

"It could be true, but I don't have the time to work it out," he comments.

He first came to this community as a houseboy for a European gold prospector just after the Second World War.

When he had finished his domestic duties for the day, he would go to the mine to help his boss. And, as he recalls now, "I got the message that I could make money for myself."

In the early 1950s, he quit his job and went to Salamaua, where he gained mining experience. He returned to Wau, perched high in the New Guinea Mountains, in 1954 and acquired his own mining leases.

One lease was near the peak of the 7,750-foot Mount Kaindi. Working it required a hydraulic pump to sluice away topsoil.

Gemora bought a 20-ton pump and was told he would never be able to get it to the remote mountain-top site. But he was determined.

A truck carried the big pump as far as possible along the tortuous roads up into the mountains. When it could get no farther, Gemora rounded up 200 local villagers and rigged a block and tackle.

Inch by inch they hauled the unit up a sheer, 400-foot mud-covered cliff face to the mine site.

With the money earned from the rich deposits, he bought one of the houses left by the early Europeans, and later his first coffee plantation.

He next bought a rundown trucking business and, as the price of gold soared on international markets, expanded his holdings and formed his own company called Omas.

Gemora now is one of the largest employers in the Wau Valley, and president of the Miners' Welfare Society.

He is also a Lutheran evangelist among his own people.

Not long ago, he took the time off to take his wife and seven children to see Australia. While there, he ran into language problems because he speaks only Pidgin, the lingua franca of Papua-New Guinea.

Gemora says that one night in Brisbane he wanted a taxi, but nobody he spoke to could understand when he said, "wanem ka." So he called a European friend in Papua-New Guinea and asked him to telephone Brisbane to order a taxi for him. He got it.

He bought a car for the remainder of his holiday and sold it before returning to the territory.

Cavers Seek Deepest Pit

By PETER BROWN

PORT MORESBY (Reuter) — Scientists and adventurers from five countries have joined forces in an unexplored area of Papua-New Guinea's highlands in the hope of finding the world's deepest cave.

They will explore a site called the Muller Range, known to contain limestone more than 5,000 feet deep.

The deepest known cave is the 4,399-foot-deep Gouffre de la Pierre St. Martin in the Basses-Pyrenees on the Franco-Spanish border.

The leader of the Papua-New Guinea expedition, Dr. Julia James, hopes that the Muller Range will have caves more than 4,000 feet deep. "Aerial photographs show plenty of sink-holes at the site," she said.

The project was organized by a Papua-New Guinea cave exploration group in conjunction with similar groups from Australia, New Zealand, Singapore and Britain.

Before setting out from Port Moresby for the Muller Range, Dr. James looked at aerial photographs of the proposed route and said: "Difficult to bloody impossible."

The 25 scientists and cave explorers, including six women, will have to hack their way through bush and tropical rain forest to reach the limestone area near the Lavani Valley.

Most of the trek will be across steep gradients 8,000 to 10,000 feet above sea level.

Government patrol officers have rarely penetrated the area, which they say is the home of nomadic Bugalo tribesmen who have never been in contract with white men.

Australian Kevan Wilde organized preliminary reconnaissance flights over the Lavani Valley to take photographs and select possible camp sites. He said the cost of the expedition would be more than $35,000, part of which would be provided by commercial and caving interests.

The main group joined Wilde's party at Tari, in the southern highlands, from where they travelled by tractor and trailers to Kelabo Mission Station.

"We hope to spend two to three months in the caves carrying out research in such fields as anthropology, geology, geomorphology, hydrology, palaeontology, speleogenesis and branches of speleology," Wilde said.

The expedition has been arranged to coincide with the southern highlands dry season, when monthly rainfall is only 10 inches.

These Men Liked Their Privacy

COPENHAGEN (AP) — Nobody thought of asking questions when a group of men put up a tent and roped off the sidewalk in front of a wine store in this Danish capital after closing time late Friday afternoon.

The tent had the markings of the Copenhagen Telephone Co. and the men put up official-looking signs asking pedestrians to use the opposite sidewlak while repair work was going on.

Later, a van with the markings of the telephone company drove up in front of the tent. After a while it drove away, but the tent remained on the sidewalk until Monday morning.

Soon afterward the wine dealer called police and told them burglars had torn down an iron grate from a basement window hidden by the tent and had gone away with $10,000 worth of whisky and cognac.

Police said the tent, signs and van apparently were stolen from the telephone company but returned before anybody missed them.

Students Differ –Survey

TORONTO (CP) — A survey by a York University sociologist indicates a difference between the type of high school student intending to pursue studies at University and those planning to attend community colleges.

The survey conducted by Paul Anisef for the minstry of colleges and universities, disclosed university-bound students tend to be male, urban, have high marks and aspire to prestigious jobs.

Students intending to go to a community college are more likely to be female, have low marks and aspire to relatively lower jobs, the survey showed.

The study was based on a survey of 2,555 Grade 12 students in 97 Ontario high schools taken last spring. Anisef said it was a representative sample of 120,000 Grade 12 students, selected on the basis of geographical area and size of school.

Of those surveyed, 30.4 per cent intended to go to University; 19 per cent to a community college; 21.4 per cent to get a job; 8.9 per cent to take time off and 11.2 per cent were undecided.

The rest planned to go to nursing schools, trade schools or similar institutions or to study part-time.

Sex and Politics Linked in Italy

ROME (AP) — The Italian Marxist-Leninist party, a radical group left of the Communists, has issued strict sex directives that are causing frustration among cell members.

A party official acknowledged that only 30 per cent of the revolutionary party members have been able to live up to the official sex guidelines.

"One reason they fail," said Angelo Arvati, 30-year-old editor of the party publication, "is because of political differences between husbands and wives."

In a manual presented by Secretary-General Aldo Brandirali, the party made sexual harmony one of its chief dictums.

"Only in that way," Brandirali said, "can one be serene the day after and begin a new day of struggle for the ultimate victory—edification of socialism."

Besides sexual harmony, the party program had warned against sexual intercourse more than once a day, claiming:

"All that about virility and making love more than once in one night is a bourgeois myth and reflects the theory that women are sex objects."

Brandirali, 32 and married, links sex and politics because "sex without class consciousness cannot give satisfaction even if it is repeated until infinity."

The party has no representation in the Italian Senate or Chamber of Deputies. However, it participates in elections. Its members are believed to number a few thousand but there is no exact count.

The party's weekly publication is said to sell about 40,000 copies.

Editor Arvati wrote: "For a Marxist-Leninist sex must be talked about in public and conducted along political lines."

The first commandment of the party calls for marriage among comrades. Divorce is accepted so long as couples confess their difficulties to the party and a decision is reached collectively by comrades.

On feminism, Arvati says, "It's a serpent beginning to creep into our organization. Gripped by false myths, many women were not working at home and were ignoring their children."

The party's sex program drew criticism, even from some leftist organizations.

"Brandirali's program is a new morality invented only to reassure the leaders of his party and to allow them to keep its members on the leash," said another extreme left organization, Lotta Continua.

"Despicable," declared Il Manifesto, the newspaper of another extreme left group.

43 Infants 'Allowed' To Die

BOSTON (AP)—Forty-three deformed infants were allowed to die with parental consent at a Yale-New Haven Hospital nursery rather than face lives devoid of "meaningful humanhood," says an article in the New England Journal of Medicine written by Drs. Raymond Duff and A. G. M. Campbell, former pediatricians at the hospital.

The deaths occurred between January, 1970, and July, 1972, at the Connecticut hospital. The doctors said infants with such deformities would have died a few years ago but now their lives can be prolonged with drugs, oxygen treatment, intravenous feeding and surgery.

COUNCIL SEAT GOES BEGGING

LYTTON (CP) — Village clerk Karl Model admitted defeat late Monday and announced he had been unable to find even one person to be a candidate for two aldermanic seats in this small interior British Columbia village.

Model said he had spent most of the seven hours calling many of the 114 village residents trying to convince them to come down and file.

"It's a shame — not even one would consider it," he said. "Now I guess it's up to the village council, those who are left, to make an appointment sometime in January. Failing that, the lieutenant-governor will have to make the appointment."

'Pure' Water Undrinkable

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Two years ago, the defence department purchased some $8,000-worth of a commercially-purified water bottled in plastic, to see whether it could be used in survival kits for navy emergency life rafts.

At the time, Canada Dry Ltd. of Toronto, the soft drink company and the maker of the specially-processed "polished" or filtered water for survival, announced its technical triumph by passing out free samples of the 16-ounce plastic bottles of water to newsmen on Parliament Hill.

Today, the water the defence department bought for its tests has "Do Not Drink" warning signs on the cartons.

And one of those free samples obtained by journalist Victor Mackie has "black crud" floating in the still-sealed container.

In a sentence: The "pure" water has been found to be so contaminated with bacteria that much of it is unfit for human consumption under even the best of circumstances, let alone on a survival raft.

The culprit, according to preliminary studies by Canada Dry and federal health scientists, seems to be the plastic bottle, not Canada Dry's elaborate and expensive multi-stage chemical and filter water purification method.

In the wake of the findings, the federal health protection branch has recently ordered a cross-country survey of all spring and mineral waters being sold in plastic bottles to the public, to determine whether any are also contaminated.

According to one of the scientists involved in the survival water studies for the defence department, most of the commercially-available plastic bottled water he has tested has been contaminated with bacteria.

Plastic bottles have become popular in recent years with the recent surge in demand for bottled spring and mineral waters. Many people regard bottled waters as being "purer" than the water they get from their taps.

Canada Dry says it does not produce any products sold in plastic for the public but that some other companies do.

Captain John Pinsent of the defence department's directorate of clothing and general engineering admitted in an interview that government tests had uncovered what he described as "black crud" floating in some samples of the bottled survival water after only one year of storage.

The survival water is supposed to last up to five years.

Laboratory tests suggested that about three of 48 samples of the water were sufficiently contaminated with bacteria to be unfit for human consumption.

The water, while it wouldn't kill a person, could produce a severe stomach upset, Capt. Pinsent explained—something that would be unacceptable in a survival situation.

The second year, tests showed that one-third of the samples were contaminated.

The tests and a larger development project stopped dead.

The survival water studies are part of a larger development of a food-water-medical survival drum being modified for Navy emergency life rafts carried by all Canadian armed forces ships.

The water is the key to the project. By replacing the existing cans of bottled water with the new plastic bottled water, the military had planned to increase the water content of a survival kit.

This would have allowed a water ration for the 20-man navy survival raft of 16 ounces a day for each man. It would have allowed the 20 men to survive comfortably with water for about a week.

Capt. Pinsent explained that everything had been going along perfectly until they discovered the contamination.

The squat-shaped plastic bottles saved space and allowed the packing of more water without the need to redesign the survival drum in the navy raft.

The Canada Dry purification process seemed "ideal."

The plastic bottles had passed all engineering tests: They had been frozen and heated, they had been dropped, they had been taken to 50 feet below sea level and 40,000 feet above sea level, all without losing a drop of water.

But then they failed the most crucial test: Storage without contamination.

The surgeon-general of the armed forces says that survival water "must be completely clean water containing absolutely no organisms, if it is going to keep as long as we want it," Capt. Pinsent said.

Federal health officials were just as finicky.

The bottle of "polished" survival water that journalist Victer Mackie found in his garage a few weeks ago obviously had something in it, which if it wasn't dangerous was at least unpalatable.

Health scientists later explained that the plastic bottles with the "black crud" were probably safe, since the bacteria had flourished and then died. Some of the clear water, by contrast, was highly contaminated.

The scientists are still unsure how the extremely pure "polished" water from Canada Dry became so contaminated. They suspect the polyethylene bottles, which were manufactured elsewhere, became contaminated before filling.

If this is the case, the solution probably involves heating the water and bottle after filling, to sterilize both. But this will add to the cost of the bottled water.

The 1,200 16-ounce bottles bought for testing by the defence department cost about $8,000. That works out to $6.66 each.

Capt. Pinsent says that with any luck, the problem may have already been solved and the survival kit project could start up again soon.

If everything goes well the second time, the plastic bottles of water could go into use in the armed forces in as little time as a year from now.

Doctors Label Attack Barrett's 'Cheap Shot'

An attack by Premier Barrett against "elitism" in B.C.'s medical profession during house debate Tuesday night was called a "cheap shot" today by a spokesman for the B.C. Medical Association.

And Oak Bay MLA Scott Wallace was accused of "playing politics" during the same debate for his blast at the tardiness of hospital development in the Capital district.

Barrett unloaded on the doctors in response to a speech by Pat McGeer (L—Vancouver Point Grey) when McGeer criticized the "lay" makeup of the proposed Medical Centre of B.C.'s board of directors.

The medical profession is a "backward closed union shop" which assumes only it knows what is good for the people, replied the premier.

He said the medical school at UBC should be graduating 160 doctors a year instead of 80 as one move away from the profession's "closed shop."

Dr. H. S. Gillespie, president-elect of the BCMA, said today he has not seen a full report of Barrett's remarks "but I think one could describe his statements as being a cheap shot.

"There is anything but a closed shop in B.C. and there is unlimited immigration of doctors and it was certainly not the medical profession that restricted enrolment at UBC (meds school)."

Gillespie said doctors want the B.C. Medical Centre, a new Crown corporation to coordinate the plan medical education and sophisticated care facilities, to provide the "best possible service to the people of Vancouver and the province, but Mr. Barrett's comments are open to question, to put it mildly."

During debate on the act to establish the centre, Wallace, who supported the government, launched an attack on the former Socred administration's health policies and went on to hammer at hospital needs in the Capital region.

Planning delays and indifference in Victoria are a disgrace, he said.

"It's easier to get blood out of a stone!" than to get action on medical services locally, he told the house.

"I suggest Wallace is playing politics," Art Young, chairman of the regional hospital board, said today.

The board through its advisory committee has taken "major steps" in hospital planning. Two more studies are needed before plans can be formulated "and we're not about to throw the taxpayers' money away" by moving before getting them.

With the completion of the studies, "well-founded planning can proceed," said Young.

STRATA ACT SLAMMED

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia house builders Tuesday told housing minister Lorne Nicolson there are unreasonable sections of the Strata Titles Act which are adding $1,000 in needless cost to each condominium unit built.

The B.C. section of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, in a meeting with Nicolson, said provisions requiring that a strata plan be registered before the first units are offered for sale or lease, that prospectus be approved by the provincial Superintendent of Insurance before the first unit is offered and that an engineer or architect supply a certificate that the buildings are finished add needless costs.

Iain Beveridge, one of the builders, said what these provisions mean is that no units can be offered before a complete project is finished, thus increasing costs because of mortgage interest rates.

Bob Flitton of Prince George also asked the minister to evaluate the stand of many municipalities, which claim the cost of supplying services to large housing developments is greater than the tax revenue generated.

He suggested that if this is so, tax incentives be granted to municipalities to alleviate this anti-housing stand, and if not true, that municipalities be instructed to approve housing developments.

Bill Borman of Kelowna asked that the government set up a board of appeal for builders on decisions adverse to developers brought by municipalities or regional districts.

$10,000 Grant For Open Space

Open Space on Fort has been awarded a $10,000 Canada Council grant to assist in its performing and visual arts program.

The only grant to be awarded to the Victoria area, it is one of 70 awarded across Canada and one of seven that are $10,000 or more.

Open Space director Gene Miller said today the money would be used for materials, "a modest salary" of $1,500 a year to be shared by Miller and his secretary.

City Legal Aid Business Booms

By IAN DARLING
Times Staff

A man arrested in Victoria for stealing a television set would probably be in jail if Keith Hamilton had not helped him.

The arrested person was going to plead guilty.

But Hamilton, Victoria's legal aid lawyer, advised him to plead not guilty, and arranged for a lawyer to defend him.

He was found not guilty.

Although this might appear to be a dramatic example of justice being brought to the legal system, Hamilton spoke about it modestly.

It was just a matter, he said in his office on Bastion Square, of the "day-to-day ensuring of people's rights."

The legal aid office was set up to ensure the rights of persons unable to afford a lawyer.

"We've been overwhelmed with the volume of work," Hamilton said when asked what had happened during the first few weeks the office has been operating.

From Sept. 24 when the office opened to Oct. 19 when the last count was made, Hamilton dealt with 253 cases.

Most of these were civil matters, but 71 were criminal law cases.

The legal aid office arranged to pay lawyers to take 51 of them.

Hamilton himself represented another 35 persons when they appeared in court for the first time.

He starts each day in the police cells by talking to whoever was arrested the previous day.

He offers advice regarding bail, and the plea which should be made.

A lot of persons who would have pleaded guilty, Hamilton said, plead not guilty after he explains their rights.

Although Hamilton admitted this means the prosecutors have more work to do, he does not think he is abusing the legal system.

"An accused person should not plead guilty until it is clear he is guilty," Hamilton said.

Once a person who cannot afford a lawyer has pleaded not guilty, he may obtain a legal aid application from Brig. Ivan Jackson—the Salvation Army officer who attends court daily.

The form is forwarded to the legal aid office where Hamilton, an articling lawyer, and two secretaries process it to see if the applicant is eligible for aid.

Applications for lawyers to defend civil cases may be filled in at the legal aid office.

The applicant must show the expense incurred by hiring a lawyer would render him incapable of providing the necessities of life to either himself or his family.

Once the application is approved, a regular lawyer is asked to take the case.

Apparently lawyers in Victoria are not waiting to be asked. Even senior lawyers, Hamilton said, have phoned the office asking for legal aid assignments.

A lawyer taking a legal aid case receives a $100 fee for a one-day trial in provincial court.

This is about half the regular fee.

Ninety per cent of the fee is paid by the federal government, which has set aside $1,000,000 this year for legal aid in B.C.

The provincial government provides the remaining 10 per cent and the cost of operating the office.

The provincial government also operates two other legal aid offices, one in Prince George and the other in Vancouver.

Hamilton spent a month in the Vancouver office last year while articling with the attorney-general's department.

Asked why he decided to work in a legal aid office rather than practise law with a private firm, the 24-year-old lawyer said he wanted to be in a position from which he could advocate legal reform.

In private practice he would have "to work within the laws as they now are."

But as a legal aid lawyer, he explained, he will be able to undertake test cases which a private lawyer might not be inclined to take because of the time involved.

Hamilton's long-term goal is to join the attorney-general's department in a policy-making role.

But he wants to do this only after he has more experience and has kept a few more innocent citizens out of jail.

Make Book Of Vegetables

How many vegetable gardeners can recite accurately today the variety name of every vegetable they sowed this past spring and summer?

Not many of us, I'll wager. That's why I for one make a list every year, writing in the names as sowing is done day by day.

The opposite page is for comments and criticisms; frequently my errors are at once apparent when the records are looked over in fall.

Anyone who has made no record of variety names grown this year should really take one evening soon to recall as accurately as possible what seeds were sown. You may have some packets still with seeds remaining. Get them out and list their kind, variety, and either the number of seeds remaining (peas, beans, squash) or whether you judge enough remain for next year's sowing.

This prevents the ordering of more before needed. Seeds no longer cost five cents a packet. Make a note too of the source of seed—the name of the seed business which distributed them.

Some seeds are fresher, cleaner and truer to variety than others, and the results show in germination, growth and crop.

Don't forget that if you handled pea, corn and bean seeds colored pink with the fungicide captan, to wash your hands.

If you were dissatisfied with the way lettuce grew, perhaps you failed because of trying warm weather varieties while soil and temperatures were too cool. Another cause of lettuce failure is too thickly-sown seed.

An early variety to stand cool weather is early curled Simpson, or black seeded Simpson. These we sowed Feb. 25 in a large coldframe bed covered with glass. Germination started march 10 and thinnings were being used by April 15 after the glass cover protection was removed. These dates from my vegetable record.

Later we grew little gem, an English variety of cos lettuce, good also for August sowing and cool fall growing. Buttercrunch is still our summer favorite.

Carrots were especially good this year, either because of providing a complete three-inch depth of soil from the compost heap for sowing into, or from thin sowing which meant very little handling of foliage to attract the carrot rust-fly.

Not having a "control" patch of carrots, we cannot know if any of these flies were around laying eggs; but if so, they failed to locate our carrots. The roots have been quite clean of the maggot of the carrot rust-fly.

Danvers half long was the variety—fine flavor all the way from thinnings to final large roots.

Tomatoes are a tricky crop to ripen here, that is, unless you grow early ripening bush varieties. Fortunately there are several. Fireball is probably the earliest, with ripe fruits on the plants by August 1.

Cold set forms fruit in cool weather, as well as germinates the seed at 50 degrees F. soil temperature. This could be a useful tomato for home gardeners here on the cool coast.

Even these notes may be of use to you among your garden records next spring when making decisions on vegetable sowings.

SOLUTION THURSDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

Just as the rubber-bridge declarer should never try for an over-trick if, in so trying, he jeopardizes his contract, so the rubber-bridge defender should always be perfectly willing to risk losing a trick if the risk taken offers him a chance of defeating declarer's contract. This latter point is the theme of today's deal.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Three of ♠.

West's opening lead of the three of spades was won by East's king. East returned the spade ten. South put up the queen — and West followed suit with the deuce.

As declarer viewed the situation at hand, the success of his contract depended on a winning club finesse. So, without further ado, at trick three he led the club nine and finessed against West's hoped-for king. East won his king and played back his remaining spade. West now cashed three spade tricks, to defeat declarer.

From West's point of view, when he declined to take his spade ace at trick two, he realized that he might never make his ace. If, for example, South had started with the Q-J-9-5 of spades, then East had no more spades. And since West had absolutely no chance of winning a trick in any of the other three suits, it was conceivable that he might never make his ace.

Incidentally, West knew that South still possessed the spade jack, for if East had held that card he would have returned it at trick two instead of returning the ten-spot (that is East's return of the ten denied the jack, for if East had held both of these cards he would have played back the higher).

In declining to take his spade ace at trick two, West indulged in the wishful thinking that his partner possessed the spade five; and that his partner held an outside card with which he could win a trick. The lead of the spade five would then defeat the contract. And so it turned out.

It is apparent that if West had captured the second spade lead with his ace and returned a third round of spades to South's jack, declarer would have fulfilled his contract. While West would now have two established spades in his hand, there would be no way for him to get the lead to cash them. South would now end up making three club tricks, four diamonds, one heart, and one spade.

2 Lanes Replace Traills

FORT ST. JAMES, B.C. (CP) — The last time Mary and Anne Traill saw this once isolated Hudson's Bay Co. trading post, it was from the back of a small river boat going down the Stuart River to civilization.

They returned this summer for the first time in 80 years. Their father, William E. Traill, was one of the last Hudson's Bay factors in northern British Columbia.

When Mary was aksed what was different since her departure in 1893, she laughed and pointed to a two-lane road which now connects Fort St. James to Vanderhoof, B.C., 29 miles to the south.

The only way into the Fort St. James region eight decades ago was by river boat.

"When we lived here we were the only Traills around," said the spry 89-year-old Mary, who along with her younger sister, Anne, lives in Victoria.

ONLY WHITES

"We were the only white people in this country. There was a Chinese man who worked at the trading post for my father. It was very isolated because in those days Fort George (now Prince George) was nothing more than a trading post and an Indian village."

The same could be said for Fort St. James when William, his wife, one son and five daughters arrived in 1888.

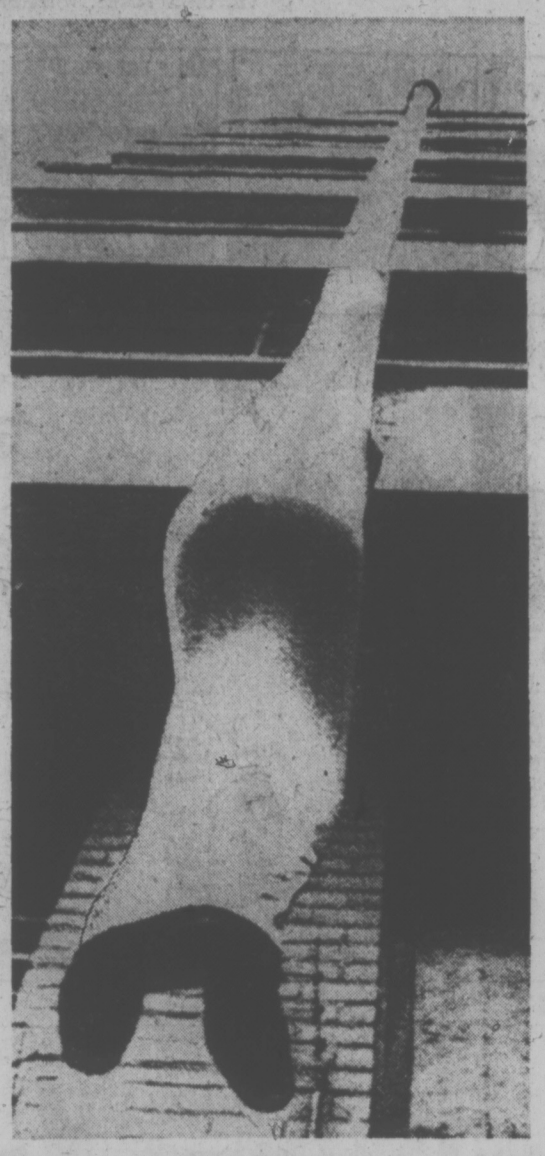
Two more Traill daughters were born at the fort, including Anne, born in the factor's residence, now part of the Fort St. James Historical Park Restoration.

The house, a stately two-storey log building, has been remodelled since the Traills called it home.

However, Mary said she still has fond memories of the building and her time in the isolated trading post.

"The thing I remember best is when people would come to the house and see seven daughters, my father would say: 'Yep, and not one too many'."

During a tour of the site, the two sisters found the scrawled signature of William E. Traill after a climb up the nearly vertical steps to the upper level of the old warehouse.



FIRE ESCAPE is demonstrated by man in Paris who is emerging from synthetic textile tube which stretches to accommodate different body builds. It is said to be capable of handling 1,000 people within an hour.

Digger's Dream Unearthed

TORRE ANNUNZIATA, Italy (NYT)— Parts of an ancient city that archeologists say might be as significant to the history of civilization as Pompeii and Herculaneum have been discovered about 20 miles south of Naples. Although full-time excavations have only recently got under way, the archeologists have unearthed an almost perfectly preserved major villa dating from the Roman period and traces of other villas and habitations.

This find opens a new chapter in archeology, said Alfonso de-Franciscis, the director of the Naples Archeological Museum, who is in charge of the excavations. "This is the kind of discovery that every archeologist dreams of all his life."

The city carries the ancient name of Oplonti and it is approximately 10 miles north of Pompeii, under the modern town of Torre Annunziata. Oplonti is unusual in that it was strictly a residential community without market places and forums. Its occupants, according to de-Franciscis, were probably wealthy Pompeiian commuters and rich Roman patricians on vacation.

The site came to archeological attention through a 16th-century map with the correct distances from Pompeii and Herculaneum. One of the reasons that excavations were not begun before, according to de-Franciscis was that archeologists had been too busy digging for the last 200 years in Pompeii and Herculaneum.

None of the ancient writers such as Pliny mentioned the city whose name, de Franciscis believes, means vine-bearing hole and springs from the extensive vineyards in the area.

Although excavations were initiated six years ago, the most sensational discoveries were made recently. The Neapolitan archeological team received a government grant this year that made extensive digging possible.

The principal find was a magnificent Roman villa, 180 feet long and 180 feet wide with a majestic portico surrounding the entire structure. "It is one of the largest and most majestic ancient houses ever found," says de-Franciscis.

The villa is remarkable not only for its size, but also for the outstanding quality of the architecture and its colorful interior wall paintings, all in a singularly fine state of preservation. De-Francscis says the villa was covered by the eruptions from Vesuvius in 79 A.D., along with Pompeii and Herculaneum.

Like most villas of the Roman period, the Oplonti villa has rooms symmetrically placed around a central atrium. Except for the kitchen, bathroom and steam room, which have unusually well-developed plumbing, de-Franciscis has not yet identified the functions of the various rooms. There are two large inside gardens and one outside garden, containing a rich variety of plants, both well known and exotic types that are now being studied.

The magnificent wall paintings, according to de-Franciscis, are as outstanding in quality as the ancient paintings from Boscoreale, another town near Pompeii noted for its exceptional wall decorations. The advantage that the Oplonti villa paintings have over the Boscoreale paintings is that the Oplonti's are all in place, making it possible to see the wall decorations as an entity in their original surrounding. The Boscoreale works are dispersed throughout the world in museums, including the Metropolitan.

De-Franciscis believes that the house was not occupied at the time of the Vesuvian eruptions. No skeletons have been found and all of the household furnishing were in one place, as if the inhabitants were planning to return. De-Franciscis believes that an earthquake 17 years before the 79 A.D. eruptions frightened the inhabitants away.

The objects found include vases, lamps, various personal items such as combs and mirrors and several sculptures. The outstanding sculptures are four centaurs, each more than 3 feet high. There are two males and two unusual female centaurs, which probably, de-Franciscis believes, were used as supports for a garden fountain.

The wall structure shows that the villa was begun in the 1st century B.C., according to de Franciscis.

GM on Power Trip

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp., feeling the pressure of the fuel squeeze, has embarked on a multi-phase program to ensure its future supplies.

GM has hired Bechtel Corp. of San Francisco to look into the feasibility of making synthetic natural gas out of coal to supply its foundry in Danville, Ill. The Danville plant is one of two GM plants served directly by Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Co.

Under Federal Power commission rules, direct industrial customers are the first to be cut off in times of shortage.

A GM spokesman said Monday that converting to oil would be extremely expensive and risky in light of current oil shortages.

In addition to authorizing the research by Bechtel, GM says it is experimenting with burning waste materials in Flint, Mich., as a means of producing power, is doing its own drilling for natural gas and is trying to develop a way to remove sulphur from stack gases.

SAXBE
. . . new A-G

Saxbe Pretty Sure

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. William Saxbe, the outspoken Republican from Ohio, emerged from an hour-long meeting with President Nixon today and said he was "relatively sure" that he would be nominated as the next U.S. attorney-general.

Saxbe said he would welcome the challenge of pulling the demoralized justice department together again and indicated announcement of his nomination was simply waiting routine checks.

"I'm relatively sure," he said when asked if he would be nominated. "I don't want to be presumptuous and say I've got it in the bag."

Saxbe said he had a candid discussion with Nixon and received assurances that the president's own actions regarding the Watergate affair have been proper.

In addition, Saxbe said he had been assured he would have the independence to do a properr job.

"I'm satisfied any necessary information will be made available from presidential tapes and documents," Saxbe told newsmen in an impromptu news conference on the front drive of the White House.

Saxbe often has backed Nixon on major legislation, but also has been an outspoken critic. Referring to the president's statements on Watergate, he once said: "He (Nixon) is like the man who plays piano in a house of ill repute and says he doesn't know what's going on upstairs."

Meanwhile, assistant Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd said today new disclosures in the ITT case appear to provide grounds for perjury charges involving 1972 Senate testimony.

Byrd's comments grew out of a report Tuesday that former attorney-general Richard Kleindienst told Archibald Cox, former Watergate special prosecutor, that President Nixon telephoned him in 1971 concerning a possible appeal of a ruling adverse to the government in an antitrust case against ITT.

Said Byrd: "The issue really boils down to this: Did the government lie about the ITT case, and also did high government witnesses commit perjury during the hearings on the Kleindienst nomination (to be attorney-general).

Byrd said today that Kleindienst in his 1972 testimony "did say that he was not importuned, that he was not pressured, he was not directed — and on the basis of information that has now come to light, this certainly has the appearance of being an untruth."

In related developments, the House judiciary committee appears ready to move quickly on the nomination of Gerald Ford to be vice-president, but politics may bog down action on impeachment of President Nixon.

Oil Policy Thursday

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Energy Minister Donald Macdonald will make a comprehensive statement, regarding future prices of gasoline and oil in eastern and western Canada, in the Commons Thursday.

He indicated that if prices of oil and gasoline in eastern Canada, based on offshore supplies of crude were considerably higher than prices in western Canada, based on Alberta supplies of crude, it would cause complications.

The statement is also expected to deal with other problems arising out of the soaring cost of oil imported into Canada from Venezuela and the Arab states.

Macdonald criticized Gulf Canada Ltd. for violating the freeze with a one-cent-a-gallon increase Monday for all fuels produced in its Montreal refinery.

Macdonald said the increase constituted a breach of a commitment made by the company when it, along with others, agreed to the proposed freeze.

Gulf raised its price as a result of sharp price increases by oil-producing countries overseas.

The government had specifically requested the company not to raise prices and that it await a government decision he said.

Conservative leader Stanfield asked if there was now a "thaw" in the government's price freeze request to the companies and if the government intends to determine the amount of increase in retail prices that would be justified in the light of the substanial increase in the price of Venezuelan crude imported into Canada.

"My statement on prices will be quite full," Macdonald said.

He refused to predict how high prices would rise in Canada in a month's time as a result of the large increase in Venezuelan oil entering Canada.

"We will have to keep a close watch on the landed cost of oil at Montreal to make a more precise evaluation of the impact on the domestic price in Canada," he explained.

Meanwhile, Trans-Canada Pipelines Ltd., which delivers natural gas to markets east of Alberta, will raise its rates to distributors by as much as

Stork Comes By PWA

Mary Ethel King wasn't on the passenger list when Pacific Western Airlines flight 722 left Port Hardy at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday—but she certainly was when the plane landed 25 minutes later in Vancouver.

And rather than charge Mary for the unscheduled flight, PWA has given her a free pass to fly on the airline until she is 21.

The pass will expire Oct. 30, 1994.

Mary, the daughter of Martha King of Port Hardy, was born while the Boeing 737 was cruising at the 15,000-foot level.

The plane was scheduled to stop at Comox before proceeding to Vancouver, but Flight Captain Frank Lote, 32, of Maple Ridge, flew straight to Vancouver after Mary was born.

There were no major complications, Captain Lote said after the plane landed.

Flight attendants Lani Reynolds, Janet Affelstein and Gail Bjornson assisted Mrs. J. Bianco—a registered nurse accompanying the mother—with the birth.

Mother and child were taken to Vancouver General Hospital by an ambulance. Both are reported doing well today.

U.S. PROTEST TO HANOI

Times News Services

The United States Tuesday formally protested that the Vietnam ceasefire of last January is being blatantly violated by "heavy infiltration" of North Vietnamese into South Vietnam.

U.S. state department spokesman Robert McCloskey said the U.S. had protested to Hanoi violations of the ceasefire agreement. He said the alleged infiltration suggested that North Vietnam is preparing for major military action in the south.

The U.S. protest was underscored today by a similar warning by South Vietnam Premier Nguyen Van Thieu. He also said the Communists are preparing for a new war.

In a nationwide radio and television address to mark National Day Thursday, Thieu said that while he was talking, tens of thousands of troops were moving from North Vietnam into South Vietnam to take part in a new war.

Thieu also called on his people to "become economically independent" in less than two years, throwing off dependence on U.S. aid.

He said this "self-sufficiency" had to be based on agricultural development.

Copter Raid Frees IRA Men

Times News Services

DUBLIN — A helicopter hijacked by a man who identified himself as an American moviemaker whisked Irish Republican Army chief Seamus Twomey and two other top IRA prisoners from Mountjoy Prison today in the most dramatic prison escape in Irish history.

The helicopter swooped to a landing inside the prison walls as the three IRA men exercised and an armed man inside the aircraft held guards at bay while the prisoners climbed aboard, police said.

In less than a minute, it whirled away in a cloud of dust.

"It was just like something out of some bloody film," one police officer said. "Nothing like this has ever happened before."

Security forces immediately launched a nation-wide search, but no trace of the escapees was found.

The Irish cabinet was called into emergency session.

Police said the helicopter was chartered at Dublin airport from Irish Helicopters Ltd.

The company said a man who called himself "Mr. Leonard" and said he was an American moviemaker staying at a Dublin hotel claimed

TAKU TUNES OUT

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Taku, where are you?

The big bull killer whale that was to be the "guinea pig" for the department of fisheries' latest research project has given his trackers the slip.

Taku—named for the windy conditions that prevailed when he was released at Pedder Bay Saturday— is fitted with a telemetric device on his dorsal fin that emits bleeps that can be tracked on radio.

The trouble is the bleeps are blocked out should he get behind an island or rock formation.

Dr. Michael Biggs of the department's biological station at Nanaimo was aboard the research boat Santa Rita when Taku took off on his fling of freedom.

He reports the whale led them a merry chase until they ran out of bleeps.

"After leaving Pedder Bay," he said, "He headed for Discovery Island where he met about 10 whales scattered around an area of about a mile."

Biggs said Taku carried on up Haro Strait, sticking around long enough to socialize with about "30 or 40" more of his species in centre channel.

From there Taku made his way over to San Juan Island, further north toward Sidney and finally set a course for some of the smaller American islands.

Behind one of these, Saturday night, he made his getaway.

"We spent all night trying to find him," Biggs said, "But he probably took a long dive —as whales often do — and disappeared out of our range."

Monday and Tuesday, Biggs became airborne in an effort to track Taku.

"He's out trying to find where his own pod has gone," Biggs said, "and that could cover a wide area from the west coast of the island, Johnstone Strait to the Gulf Islands."

In addition to his bleeper, Taku can also be recognized by the two notches cut in his dorsal fin for the purpose of easy identification.

Biggs and his co-workers hope that anyone spotting Taku in his travels will notify the nearest fisheries' office of the truant's whereabouts.

Barrett Slams 'Elitist' MDs

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

A stinging attack on the "elitism" of B.C.'s medical profession was launched by Premier Barrett Tuesday night as the legislature gave approval in principle to the Medical Centre of B.C. Act.

The attack came during three hours of lively and at times violent debate on the bill which sets up a crown corporation to co-ordinate and plan medical education and sophisticated care facilities, specifically in Greater Vancouver.

Barrett called the medical profession a "backward closed union shop" that assumes only it knows what is best for the people. (Barrett's attack today was labelled a "cheap shot." See page 57.)

Responding to a speech by Pat McGeer (L—Vancouver-Point Grey), who criticized the "lay" make-up of the corporation's board of directors, the premier said to insist on doctors making up the board would be analagous to having only teachers on school boards.

He blasted the centralization of health services at the University of B.C., calling the mental health centre there "an upper middle-class resort designed to teach medical students about mental health facilities that don't even exist in this province."

"If we allow continuation of that kind of elitist planning we would be failures as legislators," Barrett said.

As part of the movement away from the profession's "closed shop," the premier said UBC should be graduating 160 doctors a year instead of 80.

Barrett's outburst came in the wake of a Social Credit motion to have the entire bill hoisted for six months in order to await the Foukes' report on health care in B.C.

(The report of the year-long study is expected to be ready shortly and no matter its contents, it will be made public, according to Health Minister Dennis Cocke. See Page 23.)

The Socreds charged that either Health Minister Dennis Cocke knows the contents of the Foulkes study in which case he should release it to the house, or he doesn't know what that study will recommend, in which case he should wait to hear its results before introducing such major legislation.

Bob McClelland (SC — Langley) moved the bill be lifted and reintroduced in six months, after all members

BIG-CAR TAX EYED AS FUEL SAVER

WASHINGTON (Reuter)—A stiff new car-tax proposal could change the driving habits of many Americans by switching most United States car production to compact autos, which get more miles to the gallon.

A 35-page treasury staff study recommends a high tax on new cars if they get less than 20 miles to a U.S. gallon gasoline. The U.S. gallon is four-fifths the size of the Canadian gallon.

The tax would start in 1975 and rise over a three-year period to give manufacturers time to convert to more economical models.

When fully effective, the tax, which consumers would pay once only when they buy a new vehicle, could range from more than $1,200 for luxury limousines to nothing at all on small cars.

The staff proposal would have to be cleared by the treasury and the White House before being submitted to Congress, where two similar bills have already been introduced.

Now That's a Hairy Tonic!

VANCOUVER (CP) — The deputy manager of British Columbia's Liquor Control Board told Tuesday how the board once analyzed a weird patent medicine called "tincture of tiger bone" — and discovered the concoction was potent enough to bowl over a moose.

In an address to the B.C. Hotels' Association, Victoria Woodland of Victoria said the board had to suppress the sale of the concoction which was supposed to have medicinal properties.

"When we got it back from the analyst it turned out to be about 80 over-proof — you couldn't light a match in a room where you had the bottle top off.

"We figured that one spoonful would be equal to about four ounces of our liquor. You'd certainly feel good after taking a dose."

Dealing with exotic medicines proposed for sale in B.C. is all part of a day's work for the board's staff, said Woodland.

MP's WAILING WALL

OTTAWA (CP) — If Terry O'Connor had stayed away from his Commons office a day longer, he might not have been able to find it again.

When the Conservative MP for Halton arrived Tuesday, after being away for the weekend, he found workmen bricking up one of his two entrances.

None of the workmen knew why.

O'Connor asked Speaker Lucien Lamoureux in the Commons to order the construction stopped.

He said that when he was elected last October, he thought he had a job until a subsequent election, his resignation or his death.

Lamoureux granted O'Connor's request.

A public works spokesman said later the department is trying to discover who approved the work.

U.S. Puts Heat on Israel

Times News Services

The United States is pressing Israel to allow countries that do not recognize her to send troops to the UN Emergency Force diplomatic sources said Tuesday.

(Canadian participants on the new UN peace-keeping force will be soldiers-of-all-trades. See Page 10.)

The pressure is part of a U.S. campaign to persuade Israel to make concession on bigger issues, such as a return to the Oct. 22 ceasefire positions, which would compel Israel to give up a large part of her gains on the west bank of the Suez.

Pressure over UNEF is also vital because secretary general Kurt Waldheim is still having trouble finding 7,000 men for UNEF who are acceptable to all members of the Security Council and all parties to the conflict.

President Anwar Sadat of Egypt today, meanwhile disputed Israel's claim that it has the Egyptian 3rd Army trapped in the southern Sinai desert.

Sadat said the 3rd Army has the Israelis trapped on the southwest bank of the Suez canal.

He also told a news conference in Cairo that Israel must pull back the troops on the west side of the canal to the lines they held at the time of the first ceasefire on Oct. 22 before he will exchange any prisoners of war.

Israel had reported Tuesday that an exchange of wounded PoWs was imminent.

Sadat said his officers were pressing him to let them wipe out the Israeli forces on the west bank of the canal but he was holding back to give President Nixon time to pre-

Cabs Won't Roll When Anne Weds

LONDON (UPI) — Taxi drivers in London say they will stage a one-day strike on the day of Princess Anne's wedding to protest low wages and draw attention to their demands.

"I am sure most taxi drivers will support the call," said union official George Abrahams. "People going to the wedding will either have to walk or get a bus."

Princess Anne marries army Capt. Mark Phillips in Westminster Abbey on Nov. 14.

First Snifferbug ...Now Smudgybug

Smudgybug, little sister to Snifferbug, has joined British Columbia's war against pollution.

The $35,000 smoking machine will tour the province giving three-day courses on smoke observation in an effort to train certified smoke-watchers for battle against air pollution.

Smudgybug emits a small, deliberately created smoke plume of a known fixed density so that observers can then be trained to measure the smoke depth with scientific accuracy.

The training course is offered by the provincial water resources department and is open at first only to department personnel and selected representatives from municipalities and industries. Later it will be open to the public at a charge of $3.

The Smudgybug joins Snifferbug, a mobile air monitoring laboratory which has been touring the province measuring pollution for several months.

IN THE HOUSE

● Oppositon MLAs continue to hammer away at the "too much power" theme in the legislature. This time it's over the new department of transport and communication. See Page 13.

● The 10-acre limit in the Gulf Islands will remain, the legislature was told during the question period. For this and answers to questions concerning Hydro lines and pubs, see also Page 13.

Housing Costs 'Up 242%'

Immediate action to ease B.C.'s housing crisis was demanded Tuesday in a brief to the provincial government submitted by the United Community Services Organization of Vancouver.

The group says monthly housing costs have skyrocketed 242 per cent in the last 10 years, while average disposable income has increased only 85 per cent in the same period.

The cost of land, they say, has gone up 525 per cent in 10 years, from $4,000 in 1963 to $25,000 in 1973 for a typical lot in Burnaby.

In the brief submitted to Lorne Nicolson, the cabinet minister who will soon be in charge of the government's new housing department, the group lists seven steps to be taken by the province:

—Adjust per capita grants to municipalities based on the number of families moving in and the assessment base of the community in order to encourage municipalities to increase their housing in the face of increased service costs;

—Set a 60-day limit for approvals of subdivisions to end the lengthy and expensive delays experienced now;

—In one month compile an inventory of all publicly owned land and in 90 days an inventory of all privately owned parcels over one acre;

—Pinpoint urban growth areas and "make visible the government's determination to stem present spiralling costs" by helping development;

—Raise taxes to 100 per cent on "vacant serviced land in urban areas, to stimulate the process of in-filling";

—Ensure sufficient staffing in the provincial housing field;

—Purchase or lease units in moderate cost developments for persons whose incomes require a housing subsidy.

Representatives of the group said they were well-received by Nicolson, but he gave them no promise of immediate action.

For a Forgettable Film Lineups Twice a Night

Some purely personal, periodic opinions on life's little pleasures:

The Movies

A show business axiom as relevant in Victoria as it is in Times Square or Leicester Square holds that the sure way to make music at the box office is to have a show that's been banned or threatened with a ban.

Those twice-nightly lineups at the Fox Theatre for "Oh! Calcutta!", which enjoyed the distinction of being actually confiscated by the police for a day or two, makes the point once more.

"Oh! Calcutta!" is, in fact, a tedious lot of garbage, as tiresome, tasteless, vulgar, coarse and yawn-inducing a film as any to play here in years. It consists largely of a series of interminable stag-party sketches that occasionally earn the misplaced guffaws of the acne set, but are so barren of any genuine or satirical comedy that an adult patron is moved to wonder that such names as Kenneth Tynan, Jules Feiffer and John Lennon should be among those taking the blame.

The single redeeming segment, a mildly erotic ballet, performed in the nude, is a free and beautiful exercise that, unhappily, only dramatizes the juvenility of the rest of the film.

Books

The remarkable flow of Canadian guide books, the newest trend in publishing, continues unabated. Several are well worth recommending.

Mitchell Press has put out a revised, third edition of Will Dawson's "Coastal Cruising" which answers almost anything you'd want to know about skippering a small boat from Puget Sound to Alaska. I think Will should have put in more of his personal adventures and his own personality, but as a matter-of-fact, informative guide to pleasure cruising over 100,000 square miles of Pacific waterways the book is in a class by itself.

There's also a third edition of "Where to Eat in Canada," compiled by Anne Hardy, a pleasant reminder that we're coming of age in restaurant dining. There's a particularly good list of fine eating places in Montreal and Toronto, though I suspect the book falls down in listing regional restaurants. Only five are noted, for example, in our town — Le Coq Au Vin, The Empress, Hy's Steak House, the Keg 'n Cleaver and Old British Fish and Chips — which means that at least a half dozen fine eating places have been ignored. Other than that it's a readable, well-researched Canadian version of the Guide Michelin.

Chuck Davis' "Guide To Vancouver," put out by Jim Douglas' busy publishing house, is absolutely first rate, obviously a labor of love for the author who is better known for his broadcasting than his writing. There's a wonderfully humorous chapter on how to spend a weekend in Vancouver for under $20 (I once spent 10 minutes there on the same budget), but it's the best, most complete guide to that hateful place that I've yet seen.

Television

Our fat file on misleading advertising on the tube has a whimsical addition in that current commercial for Gruyere, the sharp-flavored cheese from Switzerland, in which the young, unblinking Swiss miss whips off the foil package with a single gesture. Since it takes, conservatively, a good 20 minutes to break your way into a regular package of Gruyere I fear there's a certain loss of authenticity.

Eating Out

Pierre has moved on, as these footloose Frenchmen will, but they've a new chef at Le Coq au Vin in Bastion Square and its still my favorite place to take an out-of-town visitor for lunch.

Rose Marie Baciu's fine little restaurant is reachable only by walking through the square, always one of the places in the city I love the best, and both the decor and the cuisine that awaits you ahead are just as pleasant.

The new chef is Rene Nicolai, a tall, 36-year-old native of Nice so recently arrived from the Riviera that his English is — how you say? — beautifully fractured. But Rene communicates with no difficulties whatever with a skillet.

The menu has been enlarged to embrace his own specialities, including a genuine bouillabaisse if you've a large party and give Rene a day or two warning, but the lunch-time feature is still the town's finest omelet and you may have your choice — mushroom, cheese, Provencale, asparagus, potato, tomato, shrimp, oyster, onion and many more, with a glass of wine, and get change back from a five-dollar bill for two.

The dish that gives the restaurant its name remains the house specialty at dinner with a fine table d'hote built around it. A dinner of proper onion soup, a small loaf of hot, crusty French bread, salade nicoise or coquille, coq au vin, pastry and coffee, with something from the cellar, is just about the finest meal in town and, surprisingly, one of the most reasonable.

Records

A "must" for any jazz buff is the new Columbia release called "Clifford Brown: The Beginning and the End," a memorable performance by one of the great trumpet men of all time. The title is an apt one since Brownie died in a car accident in 1956 at the age of 25. No one who hears the kind of improvisation, warmth and tone of his horn in this album can listen without a sense of loss.

Columbia says that only recently the tapes of Brownie's last recording session were discovered — the band was Chris Powell and His Blue Flames — and it must be true since no record company would deliberately keep from pressing a performance of this calibre.

Many considered him the heir apparent to Dizzy Gillespie and Gillespie has said that jazz was dealt a lethal blow by Clifford Brown's death. That is only too sadly apparent in this lyrical and high-spirited playing.

WHAT'S HALLOWEEN without a costume and it's more fun if it's a group project—for everyone that is except the "model." Michael Wilkey seems a bit doubtful on the outcome as his "classmates" at Jiminy Cricket kindergarten — from left they are Morgan Brayton, Malissa Gustus, Derk Little and teacher Mrs. Connie Champion—put finishing touches to his going-out attire. Shell Out That 'Treat' With Needy Child in Mind

A squadron of pint-sized hobgoblins and witches will cover the city this Halloween night with requests that householders shell out for United Nations Children's Fund.

Identified by an orange UNICEF collection box and a leery smile, the canvassers will explain the money collected goes to help long-term projects to aid children in developing countries of the world.

Also on the Halloween calendar are a wide variety of community bonfires:

—The Oak Bay Kiwanis Club party starts at 7 p.m. at Firemen's Park.

—Esquimalt Lions Club, starts at Kinsmen Gorge Park at 7 p.m.

—Prospect Lake Hall, on Sparton, will have a party starting at dusk.

—Starting at 6:30 p.m. will be the Colwood firemen's party at the gravel pit on Wishart, Langford firemen's party in Centennial Park behind Buffalo Hall at Carlow and the Metchosin party at the fire hall on Happy Valley Road.

—Sooke firemen's costume party starts at 7 p.m. at the fire hall on Sooke Road.

WORK FOR 200 ON REFIT JOB

About 200 extra workers will be hired by Yarrows Ltd. for the annual refit of the P and O Line's Arcadia.

The 720-foot luxury liner, with a gross tonnage of 30,000, is expected to arrive in Esquimalt at midnight Nov. 15.

After having some work done alongside, she will enter Esquimalt Graving Dock Nov. 21.

The refit is expected to take about two weeks.

A Yarrows spokesman said extra workers in all trades will be needed.

The Arcadia carries a complement of about 600. A party of 231 crew members will leave by bus for Vancouver on the first day. There they will board a chartered DC 8 to be flown back to England.

Replacements will be flown out before the Arcadia leaves.

We'll Remove Chips—Hydro

Wood chips used in a B.C. Hydro project in Langford will be removed as soon as the job is finished, the company promised Tuesday, but residents consider the promise worthless.

"By the time that job is finished, the whole area will be under two feet of water from the winter rains and those wood chips will be gone all right — right into the lake," a member of the Glen Lake Ratepayers' Association, Jim London, charged.

London and other residents say the wood chips, used by B.C. Hydro to construct an access road in the Jacklin Road area, will be carried by winter rain and spring runoffs into Lanford Lake, contaminating and perhaps destroying the marine life.

Residents want the wood chips taken out now, but a Hydro spokesman said the chips won't be removed until the job is finished, by the end of the year.

John Williams, president of the Glen Lake Ratepayers' Association, said today he has received a reply to his letter of protest to Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer saying he (Lorimer) has requested a report from B.C. Hydro on the wood chips situation.

Help Salmon To Spawn

The Amalgamated Conservation Society is looking for manpower and divers on Sunday to move spawning salmon up the Sooke River.

The operation calls for transfering fish blocked by a waterfall just above the potholes to above the canyon where they can proceed upstream to spawning beds.

Al Meadows, co-ordinator of the project, said men are needed to haul netted coho in the river and divers to see that the net does not catch on rocks.

The operation starts at 10 a.m.

Drug Meetings Next Week

The second government-sponsored conference on drug abuse and treatment of addicts will be held here all next week.

The conference, called by Human Resources Minister Norman Levi, will be closed to the public as was the first, held last May.

Ney Loses Fight to Limit School Size

A $22 million five-year school construction plan was approved Tuesday despite the protests of trustee Dr. Philip Ney.

See also Page 27 for improvements planned at Lampson elementary school.

Ney tried unsuccessfully at a special meeting of the board to amend the plan so as to include reestrictions on the size of secondary schools in coming years.

"Small schools are healthy. They're healthy for the development of a child's personality," said Ney, a psychiatrist.

His strongest objection came over a plan to add four classrooms in 1974 to Mount Douglas senior secondary.

"We add little by little until we get a monstrosity," he said. "At what point do we call a halt?"

Other board members said they supported the idea of limiting school sizes, but said the matter should be discussed at another meeting, not tied in with the five-year construction plan.

Ney moved a motion asking the Mt. Douglas addition be abandoned and a new high school be set up in the Gordon Head area in portable classrooms.

Chairman Peter Bunn ruled the motion out of order. Ney challenged the ruling of the chairman, and the rest of the board voted to uphold Bunn's decision.

Later in the meeting Ney moved an amendement to a motion approving the five-year plan that was similar to his earlier motion, and it was defeated.

"You may not like my persistence, but by George when I concern myself with kids, I'll persist," he said.

The over-all plan approved by the board, called the 1-3-5 program, includes a one-year top priority list of school construction, a three-year construction package to be submitted to referendum and a five-year long-range plan.

The provincial government has required every school district to submit its 1-3-5 program this year with cost estimates based on the first year, 1974, and not taking into account inflation.

Capital construction plans for year one, 1974, include:

—Building two new schools on school board property by Lambrick Park. One, a middle school for 500 Grade 5 to 8 students, will cost $1,297,000. The other, an elementary school for 300 students in relocatable buildings, will cost $605,000;

—Buying a site for another elementary school in north Gordon Head, for $137,000;

—Major reconstruction on Highrock junior secondary, for $884,000.

Included in plans for year two are:

—Major renovations to Victoria senior secondary $700,000) and George Jay elementary ($245,000);

—Addition of four classrooms, a library and activity room to Northridge elementary, for $345,000;

—Removal of a 1935 building at McKenzie elementary and addition of an activity room, for $252,000.

Plans for year three include:

—Expansion of the new Lambrick middle school to become a junior secondary ($1,450,000);

—Conversion of Mount View senior secondary into a junior secondary ($1,079,000);

—More renovations to Victoria senior secondary ($533,000);

—Purchase of a site for a new elementary school in Victoria West, for $100,000.

The board's 1-3-5 program estimates that $6.6 million will be spent in year four, and $3.3 million in year five.

Mulek Issued City Ultimatum To Clean Site

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Victoria city council Tuesday decided to issue an ultimatum to Vancouver developer G. F. Mulek: clean up the condition of your apartment site at View and Quadra or we'll do the work and bill you for it.

Tired of waiting for action to improve the appearance of what has been termed the biggest eyesore in town, council agreed in its caucus meeting the time has come to use its powers under the Municipal Act to force Mulek's cooperatrion.

Specifically, the city solicitor will be asked to draw up a formal notice for approval by council, directing the developer to:

—Hide all the reinforcing rods that now protrude from the building's exterior;

—Remove all forms still attached to the west face;

—Complete the ramp entrance from Quadra Street;

—Demolish the old buildings at the corner of Quadra and Fort;

—Erect a "good quality, high constriction" fence around the undeveloped portion of the site; and

—Remove all old forms and equipment.

Council was told a letter dated Oct. 22 from city engineer James Garnett to the firm, asking for this work to be done, has not been acknowledged.

At his weekly press conference today, Mayor Peter Pollen remarked the city had been "most fair" to Mulek in giving him ample opportunity to clean up the site, adding it was obvious the developer had no intention of co-operating.

City solicitor Jake de Villiers explained that if the developer fails to comply with the formal work order, the city would have the right to enter the propery, carry out the necessary work and charge the cost to Mulek on his property tax bill.

In that case, he said, the city's bill would have priority over Mulek's mortgage payments and other commitments.

The city has already billed Mulek $10,100 for repairs to damaged road surface and sidewalks, which it claims was caused by the development. To date it has not been paid.

Target of council criticism

New Vote Rule Labelled 'Vendetta'

Provincial legislation that would remove land ownership as the basis for voting eligibility and eliminate all corporate voters from municipal voting lists was described Tuesday as "almost a vendetta against property owners and businesses."

Victoria Ald. Mike Young said during a freewheeling discussion of the legislation by city council's caucus it appears more than just electoral reform is involved in the provincial government's move.

The proposed amendments to the Municipal Act seem to be designed to "disenfranchise property owners once and for all," he said.

"It's actually frightening," chipped in Mayor Peter Pollen. "It's smacking almost of the development of class warfare. It's rather shocking. . . ."

Ald. Sam Bawlf said those who really stand to lose are not the big corporate interests but the small businessmen, whose base of influence is narrow enough already without having it whittled away by the denial of property voting rights.

Referring to another amendment to give tenants the right to vote on money bylaws, Ald. Bill Tindall noted "transient" voters would be able to affect the outcome of vital issues and "be gone the next day."

Young also came down heavily on another provision in the package of amendments — that would remove the specific term property owners from the designation of those who must be notified as persons potentially affected by public hearings on zoning changes.

The new requirement under the legislation would be merely that occupants of property in the area concerned be notified.

Victoria protested the inclusion of occupants when the act was amended earlier this year, and Young said the proposal now to leave that as the only category would create further problems rather than alleviating the present difficulties.

(The city claims it is near-impossible to keep track of a constantly moving residential population in any given area. Besides the physical problem of sending out hundreds of notifications, officials fear a public hearing could be ruled invalid if only one person claims he was not notified).

Said Young disgustedly: "The people we are required to send notices to now are those we don't have on our rolls."

Stressing the difficulty of keeping an accurate tally of residents, Bawlf said the North American norm is that each person moves every three years.

"I would suggest that Victoria, with its high proportion of rental accommodation, well exceeds that norm."

Bawlf said a rough estimate would be that of James Bay's population of about 9,000, "300 to 500 people would move in and out every six months."

To avoid confusion, and in expectation the provincial government would act soon to improve the situation, city council last week postponed indefinitely three public hearings that had been scheduled for December.

Aldermen agreed Tuesday the hopes had been dashed, and the hearings should continue to be deferred until the impasse is resolved.

Belly Dancers In Saanich?

Belly dancers at the Lakehill Women's Institute Hall?

It may have been the acoustics or the soft-spoken tones of the spokesman but there was some confusion Tuesday when Saanich council held a public hearing on zoning of the LWI property on Quadra to permit a parking lot.

The spokesman had been asked about the number of cars that could be expected to be parked during evening activities at the hall.

She mentioned there was a regular Saturday dance that drew about 100 people and the hall was also used for other events.

Eyebrows were raised slightly when one event appeared to be belly dancing.

"That's not belly dancing," said Ald. Bill Noel, helping out the spokesman, "It's ballet dancing!"

The council approved the zoning for the parking lot, which will hold 30 cars, providing six-foot screening is erected to protect homeowners in the area.

Nixon Tapes Aren't There

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — The White House told U.S. district Judge John Sirica today there is no tape of a crucial conversation between President Nixon and ousted counsel John Dean on April 15, 1973.

Also missing is a conversation with former U.S. attorney-general John N. Mitchell immediately following the bugging arrests at the Democratic headquarters at the Watergate in June, 1972.

White House Lawyer J. Fred Buzhardt acknowledged that the telephone conversation with Mitchell which took place on the evening of June 20, 1972, "apparently was made from a phone extension" in the White House that was "not hooked into the recording system."

Buzhardt also said a tape of a conversation between Nixon and Dean in the president's office on April 15, 1973, "was not recorded due to a malfunction of the system or a basic inadequancy of the system."

The two tape recordings were among nine subpoenaed by special prosecutor Archibald Cox before he was fired by Nixon Oct. 20.

The following Tuesday, on Oct. 23, Nixon announced he would bow to two federal court orders requiring him to surrender all nine tapes for Sirica's inspection and eventual review by federal grand juries investigating the scandal.

Sirica said he had learned that the two tapes did not exist when he met Buzhardt privately Tuesday to discuss procedures for turning over the material to the court.

Earlier, in Washington, Sen. William Saxbe, the outspoken Republican from Ohio, emerged from an hour-long meeting with President Nixon today and said he was "relatively sure" that he would be nominated as the next U.S. attorney-general.

Saxbe said he would welcome the challenge of pulling the demoralized justice department together again and indicated announcement of his nomination was simply waiting routine checks.

"I'm relatively sure," he said when asked if he would be nominated. "I don't want to be presumptuous and say I've got it in the bag."

Saxbe said he had a candid discussion with Nixon and received assurances that the president's own actions regarding the Watergate affair have been proper.

In addition, Saxbe said he had been assured he would have the independence to do a proper job.

"I'm satisfied any necessary information will be made available from presidential tapes and documents," Saxbe told newsmen in an impromptu news conference on the front drive of the White House.

Saxbe often has backed Nixon on major legislation, but also has been an outspoken critic. Referring to the president's statements on Watergate, he once said: "He (Nixon) is like the man who plays piano in a house of ill repute and says he doesn't know what's going on upstairs."

Meanwhile, assistant Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd said today new disclosures in the ITT case appear to provide grounds for perjury charges involving 1972 Senate testimony.

In related developments, the House judiciary committee appears ready to move quickly on the nomination of Gerald Ford to be vice-president, but politics may bog down action on impeachment of President Nixon.

Oil Policy Thursday

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Energy Minister Donald Macdonald will make a comprehensive statement, regarding future prices of gasoline and oil in eastern and western Canada, in the Commons Thursday.

He indicated that if prices of oil and gasoline in eastern Canada, based on offshore supplies of crude, were considerably higher than prices in western Canada, based on Alberta supplies of crude, it would cause complications.

The statement is also expected to deal with other problems arising out of the soaring cost of oil imported into Canada from Venezuela and the Arab states.

Macdonald criticized Gulf Canada Ltd. for violating the freeze with a one-cent-a-gallon increase Monday for all fuels produced in its Montreal refinery.

Macdonald said the increase constituted a breach of a commitment made by the company when it, along with others, agreed to the proposed freeze.

Gulf raised its price as a result of sharp price increases by oil-producing countries overseas.

The government had specifically requested the company not to raise prices and that it await a government decision he said.

Conservative leader Stanfield asked if there was now a "thaw" in the government's price freeze request to the companies and if the government intends to determine the amount of increase in retail prices that would be justified in the light of the substanial increase in the price of Venezuelan crude imported into Canada.

"My statement on prices will be quite full," Macdonald said.

He refused to predict how high prices would rise in Canada in a month's time as a result of the large increase in Venezuelan oil entering Canada.

"We will have to keep a close watch on the landed cost of oil at Montreal to make a more precise evaluation of the impact on the domestic price in Canada," he explained.

Meanwhile, Trans-Canada Pipelines Ltd., which delivers natural gas to markets east of Alberta, will raise its rates to distributors by as much as

Stork Comes By PWA

Mary Ethel King wasn't on the passenger list when Pacific Western Airlines flight 722 left Port Hardy at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday—but she certainly was when the plane landed 25 minutes later in Vancouver.

And rather than charge Mary for the unscheduled flight, PWA has given her a free pass to fly on the airline until she is 21.

The pass will expire Oct. 30, 1994.

Mary, the daughter of Martha King of Port Hardy, was born while the Boeing 737 was cruising at the 15,000-foot level.

The plane was scheduled to stop at Comox before proceeding to Vancouver, but Flight Captain Frank Lote, 32, of Maple Ridge, flew straight to Vancouver after Mary was born.

There were no major complications, Captain Lote said after the plane landed.

Flight attendants Lani Reynolds, Janet Affelstein and Gail Bjornson assisted Mrs. J. Bianco—a registered nurse accompanying the mother—with the birth.

Mother and child were taken to Vancouver General Hospital by an ambulance. Both are reported doing well today.

U.S. PROTEST TO HANOI

Times News Services

The United States Tuesday formally protested that the Vietnam ceasefire of last January is being blatantly violated by "heavy infiltration" of North Vietnamese into South Vietnam.

U.S. state department spokesman Robert McCloskey said the U.S. had protested to Hanoi violations of the ceasefire agreement. He said the alleged infiltration suggested that North Vietnam is preparing for major military action in the south.

The U.S. protest was underscored today by a similar warning by South Vietnam Premier Nguyen Van Thieu. He also said the Communists are preparing for a new war.

In a nationwide radio and television address to mark National Day Thursday, Thieu said that while he was talking, tens of thousands of troops were moving from North Vietnam into South Vietnam to take part in a new war.

Thieu also called on his people to "become economically independent" in less than two years, throwing off dependence on U.S. aid.

He said this "self-sufficiency" had to be based on agricultural development.

Copter Raid Frees IRA Men

Times News Services

DUBLIN — A helicopter hijacked by a man who identified himself as an American moviemaker whisked Irish Republican Army chief Seamus Twomey and two other top IRA prisoners from Mountjoy Prison today in the most dramatic prison escape in Irish history.

The helicopter swooped to a landing inside the prison walls as the three IRA men exercised and an armed man inside the aircraft held guards at bay while the prisoners climbed aboard, police said.

In less than a minute, it whirled away in a cloud of dust.

"It was just like something out of some bloody film," one police officer said. "Nothing like this has ever happened before."

Security forces immediately launched a nation-wide search, but no trace of the escapees was found.

The Irish cabinet was called into emergency session.

Police said the helicopter was chartered at Dublin airport from Irish Helicopters Ltd.

The company said a man who called himself "Mr. Leonard" and said he was an American moviemaker staying at a Dublin hotel claimed

TAKU TUNES OUT

Taku, where are you?

The big bull killer whale that was to be the "guinea pig" for the department of fisheries' latest research project has given his trackers the slip.

Taku—named for the windy conditions that prevailed when he was released at Pedder Bay Saturday— is fitted with a telemetric device on his dorsal fin that emits bleeps that can be tracked on radio.

The trouble is the bleeps are blocked out should he get behind an island or rock formation.

Dr. Michael Biggs of the department's biological station at Nanaimo was aboard the research boat Santa Rita when Taku took off on his fling of freedom.

He reports the whale led them a merry chase until they ran out of bleeps.

"After leaving Pedder Bay," he said, "He headed for Discovery Island where he met about 10 whales scattered around an area of about a mile."

Biggs said Taku carried on up Haro Strait, sticking around long enough to socialize with about "30 or 40" more of his species in centre channel.

From there Taku made his way over to San Juan Island, further north toward Sidney, and finally set a course for some of the smaller American islands.

Behind one of these, Saturday night, he made his getaway.

"We spent all night trying to find him," Biggs said, "But he probably took a long dive —as whales often do — and disappeared out of our range."

Monday and Tuesday, Biggs became airborne in an effort to track Taku.

"He's out trying to find where his own pod has gone," Biggs said, "and that could cover a wide area from the west coast of the island, Johnstone Strait to the Gulf Islands."

In addition to his bleeper, Taku can also be recognized by the two notches cut in his dorsal fin for the purpose of easy identification.

Biggs and his co-workers hope that anyone spotting Taku in his travels will notify the nearest fisheries' office of the truant's whereabouts.

Barrett Slams 'Elitist' MDs

By LINDA HUGHES

Times Staff

A stinging attack on the "elitism" of B.C.'s medical profession was launched by Premier Barrett Tuesday night as the legislature gave approval in principle to the Medical Centre of B.C. Act.

The attack came during three hours of lively and at times violent debate on the bill which sets up a crown corporation to co-ordinate and plan medical education and sophisticated care facilities, specifically in Greater Vancouver.

Barrett called the medical profession a "backward closed union shop" that assumes only it knows what is best for the people. (Barrett's attack today was labelled a "cheap shot." See page 57.)

Responding to a speech by Pat McGeer (L—Vancouver-Point Grey), who criticized the "lay" make-up of the corporation's board of directors, the premier said to insist on doctors making up the board would be analagous to having only teachers on school boards.

He blasted the centralization of health services at the University of B.C., calling the mental health centre there "an upper middle-class resort designed to teach medical students about mental health facilities that don't even exist in this province."

"If we allow continuation of that kind of elitist planning we would be failures as legislators," Barrett said.

As part of the movement away from the profession's "closed shop," the premier said UBC should be graduating 160 doctors a year instead of 80.

Barrett's outburst came in the wake of a Social Credit motion to have the entire bill hoisted for six months in order to await the Foukes' report on health care in B.C.

(The report of the year-long study is expected to be ready shortly and no matter its contents, it will be made public, according to Health Minister Dennis Cocke. See Page 23.)

The Socreds charged that either Health Minister Dennis Cocke knows the contents of the Foulkes study in which case he should release it to the house, or he doesn't know what that study will recommend, in which case he should wait to hear its results before introducing such major legislation.

Bob McClelland (SC — Langley) moved the bill be lifted and reintroduced in six months, after all members

First Snifferbug ...Now Smudgybug

Smudgybug, little sister to Snifferbug, has joined British Columbia's war against pollution.

The $35,000 smoking machine will tour the province giving three-day courses on smoke observation in an effort to train certified smoke-watchers for battle against air pollution.

Smudgybug emits a small, deliberately created smoke plume of a known fixed density so that observers can then be trained to measure the smoke depth with scientific accuracy.

The training course is offered by the provincial water resources department and is open at first only to department personnel and selected representatives from municipalities and industries. Later it will be open to the public at a charge of $3.

The Smudgybug joins Snifferbug, a mobile air monitoring laboratory which has been touring the province measuring pollution for several months.

BIG-CAR TAX EYED AS FUEL SAVER

WASHINGTON (Reuter)—A stiff new car-tax proposal could change the driving habits of many Americans by switching most United States car production to compact autos, which get more miles to the gallon.

A 35-page treasury staff study recommends a high tax on new cars if they get less than 20 miles to a U.S. gallon gasoline. The U.S. gallon is four-fifths the size of the Canadian gallon.

The tax would start in 1975 and rise over a three-year period to give manufacturers time to convert to more economical models.

When fully effective, the tax, which consumers would pay once only when they buy a new vehicle, could range from more than $1,200 for luxury limousines to nothing at all on small cars.

The staff proposal would have to be cleared by the treasury and the White House before being submitted to Congress, where two similar bills have already been introduced.

Now That's a Hairy Tonic!

VANCOUVER (CP) — The deputy manager of British Columbia's Liquor Control Board told Tuesday how the board once analyzed a weird patent medicine called "tincture of tiger bone" — and discovered the concoction was potent enough to bowl over a moose.

In an address to the B.C. Hotels' Association, Victoria Woodland of Victoria said the board had to suppress the sale of the concoction which was supposed to have medicinal properties.

"When we got it back from the analyst it turned out to be about 80 over-proof — you couldn't light a match in a room where you had the bottle top off.

"We figured that one spoonful would be equal to about four ounces of our liquor. You'd certainly feel good after taking a dose."

Dealing with exotic medicines proposed for sale in B.C. is all part of a day's work for the board's staff, said Woodland.

U.S. Puts Heat on Israel

Times News Services

The United States is pressing Israel to allow countries that do not recognize her to send troops to the UN Emergency Force diplomatic sources said Tuesday.

(Canadian participants on the new UN peace-keeping force will be soldiers-of-all-trades. See Page 10.)

The pressure is part of a U.S. campaign to persuade Israel to make concession on bigger issues, such as a return to the Oct. 22 ceasefire positions, which would compel Israel to give up a large part of her gains on the west bank of the Suez.

Pressure over UNEF is also vital because secretary general Kurt Waldheim is still having trouble finding 7,000 men for UNEF who are acceptable to all members of the Security Council and all parties to the conflict.

President Anwar Sadat of Egypt today, meanwhile disputed Israel's claim that it has the Egyptian 3rd Army trapped in the southern Sinai desert.

Sadat said the 3rd Army has the Israelis trapped on the southwest bank of the Suez canal.

He also told a news conference in Cairo that Israel must pull back the troops on the west side of the canal to the lines they held at the time of the first ceasefire on Oct. 22 before he will exchange any prisoners of war.

Israel had reported Tuesday that an exchange of wounded PoWs was imminent.

Sadat said his officers were pressing him to let them wipe out the Israeli forces on the west bank of the canal but he was holding back to give President Nixon time to pre-

Cabs Won't Roll When Anne Weds

LONDON (UPI) — Taxi drivers in London say they will stage a one-day strike on the day of Princess Anne's wedding to protest low wages and draw attention to their demands.

Princess Anne marries army Capt. Mark Phillips in Westminster Abbey on Nov. 14.

MP's WAILING WALL

OTTAWA (CP) — If Terry O'Connor had stayed away from his Commons office a day longer, he might not have been able to find it again.

When the Conservative MP for Halton arrived Tuesday, after being away for the weekend, he found workmen bricking up one of his two entrances.

None of the workmen knew why.

O'Connor asked Speaker Lucien Lamoureux in the Commons to order the construction stopped.

He said that when he was elected last October, he thought he had a job until a subsequent election, his resignation or his death.

Lamoureux granted O'Connor's request.

A public works spokesman said later the department is trying to discover who approved the work.

Housing Costs 'Up 242%'

Immediate action to ease B.C.'s housing crisis was demanded Tuesday in a brief to the provincial government submitted by the United Community Services Organization of Vancouver.

The group says monthly housing costs have skyrocketed 242 per cent in the last 10 years, while average disposable income has increased only 85 per cent in the same period.

The cost of land, they say, has gone up 525 per cent in 10 years, from $4,000 in 1963 to $25,000 in 1973 for a typical lot in Burnaby.

In the brief submitted to Lorne Nicolson, the cabinet minister who will soon be in charge of the government's new housing department, the group lists seven steps to be taken by the province:

—Adjust per capita grants to municipalities based on the number of families moving in and the assessment base of the community in order to encourage municipalities to increase their housing in the face of increased service costs;

—Set a 60-day limit for approvals of subdivisions to end the lengthy and expensive delays experienced now;

—In one month compile an inventory of all publicly owned land and in 90 days an inventory of all privately owned parcels over one acre;

—Pinpoint urban growth areas and "make visible the government's determination to stem present spiralling costs" by helping development;

—Raise taxes to 100 per cent on "vacant serviced land in urban areas, to stimulate the process of in-filling";

—Ensure sufficient staffing in the provincial housing field;

—Purchase or lease units in moderate cost developments for persons whose incomes require a housing subsidy.

Representatives of the group said they were well-received by Nicolson, but he gave them no promise of immediate action.
